THE GIRLS' CAMP, VARTY LAKE

The visitors at Varty Lake Girls' Camp on Sunday last, were indeed a surprised and pleased lot of people, surprised at the speed and efficiency of a troop of young girls converting a beautiful grove into the appearance of a long established camp.

There is about fifty young girls all in bloomers and middys, keen of eye and wit, ready for anything, and capable of any amount of work and fun, as they work as well as play.

At 3 o'clock a whistle called everyone to the afternoon service, led by Rev. Mr. McKenzie, Camp Chaplain, who spoke to the girls of the Four Fold Life, the Christian church was trying to nourish and instil into the youth of our land through the C. G. I. T. work.

After visiting around for a short time, the girls detailed to prepare the supper took possession of the kitchen, and under the able instructions of Mother Smith, soon were ready for the evening meal.

After supper was over all were called by whistle to the front of the tent around the flag staff to attend the lowering of the flag at sunset.

A large pile of wood had been gathered, and as twilight changed into darkness, was set on fire, everyone gathered round and had camp singing, which will not soon be forgotten.

Soon a signal was given and six buglers came before the fire and blew a signal that all the gates to the city were closed. No sooner had this been done than an old decrepit traveller limped upon the scene. Just then four bold, bad robbers rushed from behind the fire and set upon him, bruised and beat him and left him half dead at the roadside, groaning with pain.

The priest walking by merely looked at him, while the Levite took the path on the other side. Suddenly from behind a car came, the Good Samaritan, clothed in a hastily snatched quilt from someone's bed, with a canteen bottle of fresh, cold water, and a laundry bag full of bandages and healing salves, and with compassion in his heart, stopped, bound up the bruised limbs and head, from which the blood was flowing, gave drink and succor and helped the poor groaning sufferer from the scene. Everyone readily recognized the Good Samaritan and it brought home to each and everyone, the beauty of this old, often told Bible lesson.

Six girls all in white formed a cross in a devout attitude in front of the fire, while a young member of the camp sang, "My Faith Looks up to Thee."

After more singing of old favorites, the visitors began to leave the camp, all voting it a well spent afternoon, and deserving of the full support of our community.

Wednesday, the 22nd of July, will be field day. Sports will be put on by the camp girls. A large attendance of visitor is anticipated.

TRACK AND FIELD SPORTS FOR SCHOOLS

THE WHOLE PROVINCE BEING ORGANIZED TO GIVE EACH PUBLIC, SEPARATE, CONTINUATION, HIGH SCHOOL, OR COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE A CHANCE TO COMPETE IN PROVINCIAL EVENTS.

FULL INFORMATION TO BE SENT SCHOOL BOARDS WHEN DATES ARE FIXED.

The Ontario Athletic Commission has succeeded in bringing about a much-desired amalgamation of the school athletic activities to cover the entire province. Western and Central Ontario and the Georgian Bay towns have been well organized for some years back, but have lacked the unanimity necessary to hold one big Provincial championship school meet—public, separate and high.

At a meeting of these bodies at the Commission offices, the first step toward the holding of such an annual championship meet in Toronto was taken, a programme arranged for such an event to be held about the first week in October this year, and the Province tenatively divided into sections.

The commission suggested that each of these sections hold meets within its own borders, and send the winner in each event to the Provincial Championships at the expense of the commission, who are also prepared to donate the prizes for these championships, as well as a limited number of medals as prizes for each sectional meet.

A second candidate may be entered for each event, but his expenses would have to be paid by the section.

Coach Walter Knox whose exclusive services were engaged by the commission for a year, will be in charge of all the details necessary to bring the matter to a successful issue.

He will also set standards for each event which it will be necessary for each winner to attain to in the sectional meets to qualify him for the championship gathering at the expense of the commission.

Studens up to June 30th, 1924, will be eligible, and each section is responsible for the weights, ages, etc., of the candidates sent from its confines.

PROPOSED SECTIONS

The proposed sections are :

1. Western—The present W.O. S.S.A., but including public and separate schools.
2. Central—Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford, Niagara Peninsula and North.
3. Georgian Bay — Midland, Orillia, Collingwood, Barrie, to and including Lindsay.
4. Peterboro and Lake towns.
5. Kingston and St. Lawrence towns, including Belleville and Brockville.
6. Ottawa and district to Smiths Falls and Perth.
7. Northern Ontario.
8. Fort William and Port Arthur.

LIST OF EVENTS

The list of events as agreed upon is :

Public and Separate

Boys, 12 and 13 years on the day of the meet—100 yards, 220 yards, running high jump, running broad jump.

Boys, 14 and 15—100 yards, 220 yards, running high jump, running broad jump, pole vault, 440 yards relay.

High Schools

Juniors, 15 years and under, 115 pounds-100 yards, 220 yards, running broad jump, running high jump, shot put, pole vault, 440 yards relay.

Intermediate, 17 years and under, 135 pounds—100 yards, 220 yards, 440 yards, 880 yards, running broad jump, running high jump, pole vault, shot put, 120 yards (low hurdles), mile relay.

Those present at the meeting were : The full commission with its Department head, the Hon. Dr. Forbes Godfrey ; Chairman T. A. Murphy ; H. I. Price ; M. M. Robinson (Hamilton), Harvey Pulford (Ottawa), T. A. McGinnis (Kingston), and Secretary J. P. Fitzgerald, President Miller and Dr. George Smith of London and the W.O.S.S.A. ; P. Douglas, Ontario Association, and Mr. Lapp of Ottawa.

KINGSTON DISTRICT HAS ORGANIZED

Plans for the organization of this district in readiness for the track and field meets arranged for the coming fall for the pupils of public, separate, continuation and high schools and collegiate institutes were made at a meeting at the home of T. A. McGinnis, Kingston, on Friday afternoon called by the Ontario Athletic Commission.

The Commission was appointed by the Ontario Government recently to organize athletics in the schools of the province. T. A. Murphy is chairman, Walter Knox, the noted all-round athletic is head coach, James Fitzgerald is secretary and the other members include Mr. McGinnis, Harry Price, R. Robinson and Harvey Pulford. At Friday afternoon's meeting Mr. McGinnis and Mr. Knox met representatives from this district including Trustees T. G. Bishop, Rev. Father Nicholson, and Dean Matheson, of Kingston ; Dr. E. J. Bracken and S. Mackenzie, of Gananoque ; G. C. Howison, of Brockville ; H. Daly and A. Wood, of Napanee.

PROVINCIAL MEET

The date for the provincial meet is not yet fixed, but it will likely be the first week in October. The district includes from Brockville to Trenton and north to, but not including Smiths Falls. The meeting considered that no more central or better place for the meet in this district could be found than Kingston, and they hope to hold it in the Richardson stadium.

The commission plans, too, a great deal of educational and demonstration work throughout the schools of the province. Mr. Knox himself has visited, and hopes to visit many more places in Ontario, while literature is being prepared for circulation, such as the standard rules for competitions, and hints on training. Nothing is more promising than the slow motion pictures which Mr. Knox has just had prepared to illustrate correct training methods. These are to be distributed throughout the schools, or if latter do not possess a picture machine, a man may possibly travel around with such equipment.

In thus encouraging track sports, a thing which has been going on for five years in the west, the commission does not aim at creating champions, but at developing the physique and health of the youth of the province. Speaking personally Mr. Knox thought field sports were better than games to develop individuality. In games an ordinary athletic could carry on with a championship team because he had someone to think for him, but in track sports he had to depend on himself.

Mr. Knox assured the representatives from Napanee that he would visit the town in connection with the scheme.

THE WESTERN HARVEST

Early preparations are being made this year to cope with the situation in the west as far as the harvesting of the wheat crop is concerned. From early spring it has been realized that the 1925 crop would be considerably in excess of that harvested last year and now, while no definite estimates can yet be made, it is expected that the crop will approximate 275,000,000 bushels. If anything approaching this figure is reached it is apparent that it will be necessary to import a large number of harvest workers into the west to help handle it. Much, of course, still depends upon continued favorable weather conditions but regardless of what transpires in the meantime the Canadian Railways are proceeding with their arrangements for the operation of harvesters' excursions on the assumption that there is to be a bumper crop.

Already several preliminary meetings have been held between railway officials and government representatives with the result that it is now estimated that between 45,000 and 50,000 harvesters will be needed in the prairie provinces in addition to those available locally. In fact, the total estimate of help required in the west is 60,000, but the several provinces figure that they can meet a part of these requirements by men available in the west.

A meeting will be held at Winnipeg, July 24th, attended by the officials of the various governments of the western provinces and representatives of the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific at which more definite figures will be arrived at and this meeting will be followed by the formulating of plans for obtaining and transporting the harvesters required.

The arrangements for handling harvesters will be practically the same as in former years except on a larger scale. Every available car of the colonist type will be pressed into use by both roads and the usual arrangements will be made to look after the comforts of the excursionists.

THE COUNCIL AT JERUSALEM

Sunday, July 26.—Acts 15 : 1-35.

Golden Text—We believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we shall be saved (Acts 15 : 11).

Ask the average man whether or not he is a Christian, and he is likely to reply : "Well, I'm trying to do the best I can." No one ever became a Christian that way, nor ever will. Salvation is not had by trying, but by trusting.

One of the most difficult things for men to believe, especially religious men, is that God saves them, not because of anything they do for Him, but because of what He does for them.

One of the requirements of the Old Testament law, given by God Himself to the Jews through Moses, and long before Moses given to Abraham, was that every male child of the Jews, should be circumcised, a covenant (which means cutting) in the flesh, indicating separation of the life unto God. This was but one of many details required of Israelites by the law.

At Antioch, and during the first missionary journey of Paul and Barnabas, both Jews and Gentiles had been saved, not by doing any good works of the law, but by simple faith in Christ and His death and resurrection as God's way of salvation for lost sinners.

As the new converts and the leaders of the new Church were rejoicing in this wonderful yet simple salvation, a bombshell was thrown into their midst by certain Jews arriving from Judea and telling the Christians that they could not be saved "except ye be circumcised after the manner of Moses."

In other words, they were declaring that salvation was, after all, by works and not by faith. It was the most serious crisis confronting the Church of Christ up to that time. To settle it, the Council at Jerusalem was held.

First, three men bore witness to the fact that God had commanded that the Gospel should be given to the Gentiles, and had "had put no difference between us (the Jews) and them (the Gentiles), purifying their hearts by faith." One of these three witnesses, Peter, cautioned the Church not to try to put upon people a yoke, the Old Testament law, which no one had ever been able to bear. The other two witnesses, Barnabas and Paul, declared the miracles and wonders that God had wrought among the Gentiles when they simply believed in Christ.

So the Council made a momentous decision, plainly guided by the Holy Spirit. The Judaizers who had been troubling the new Christians were formally disavowed. It was seen that circumcision was not a condition of salvation, nor, indeed, was any other part of the law of Moses. But those who had been born again by faith in Christ were formally asked to "abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood and from things strangled, and from fornication." As has been well said, "Gentile believers were to show grace by abstaining from practices offensive to godly Jews." It seems strange that gross immortality, like fornication, should be mentioned in connection with mere ceremonial matters. The explanation appears to be, as the Companion Bible points out, that "in many cases the rites of heathenism involved uncleanness as an act of worship."

It was an early statement of the doctrine of Justification by Faith. That doctrine had been clearly set forth by the Lord Himself during His earthly ministry. It was unfolded in its fulness by the revelation given by the Lord to Paul, and presented in such inspired epistles as Romans and Galatians. In the latter episile Paul writes :

> Received ye the Spirit by the works of the law, or by the hearing of faith ? Are ye so foolish ? Having begun in the Spirit, are ye now made perfect by the flesh ? For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse, for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that in the sight of God, it is evident ; for the just shall live by faith.

But in the midst of the record of the Council at Jerusalem occurs another passage, equally momentous (verses 14-17). The head of the Council, James, called attention to Peter's statement that God had been visiting the Gentiles "to take out of them a people for His name," and quoted Old Testament prophecy of the program of the age then begun.

The work of calling out from a lost world all who are willing to be saved is now going on, and is our duty as Christians. "After this I will return," says the Lord Jesus Christ. Then He pledges Himself to build again the tabernacle of David," to gather the Jews to Himself, and to sweep around the world in such a campaign of evangelism as the world never can know until the Jews, recognizing and receiving Jesus of Nazareth as their Messiah, accept the commission that God gave them long ago.

The First Compass.

While on the slopes of Mount Ida, in Asia Minor, more than two thousand years ago, a shepherd found that the iron-shod end of his staff was clinging to a stone. He also found many pieces of this strange stone scattered on the ground.

This hard black mineral, which is an oxide of iron, became known as "Magnes-stone," as it was found in a district called Magnesia. It is probable that our word magnet is derived from the name.

No use was made of the mineral for many centuries. At last, however, a Chinese found that a piece of this stone, hung on a thread, always pointed to the north and south. This crude instrument was the father of our modern compass.

"Lucky Dog!"

The Vicar (wishing to be severe): "Do you know, Albert, whenever I see you in an intoxicated condition, I can't help thinking of a certain animal!"

Albert: "Ay! I know, parson. Ye think: 'Lucky dog—lucky dog!' "

His Cure for Thin Hair.

A knight of the scissors said to a customer: "Your hair's getting thin, sir; let me sell you——" "That's all right," said the man in the chair. "I put something on it every morning." "May I ask what you put on it, sir?" "My hat!"

Where do we sleep?

Popular Chicago Lyric Singers at Coming Dominion Chautauqua

The Chicago Lyric Singers, popular musical entertainment organization, will be a distinctive feature of the coming Dominion Chautauqua here.

This notable company presents, with rare artistry, many of the beautiful songs of Wales, given in typical Welsh costumes.

Gypsy selections sung in Spanish gypsy costumes and oratorio gems, together with selections from both light opera and grand opera, are included in their repertoire.

The members of this company are not only exceptional singers, but possess in remarkable degree the dramatic qualities so necessary in addition to their vocal gifts.

Here and There

During July thousands of osteopaths and members of allied professions gathered in Toronto from all parts of the United States and Canada to attend the International Convention of Osteopaths. Several of the visitors toured the country in the interests of osteopathy.

Final figures showing the total live lobster catch on the Nova Scotia coasts, for the season ending June 1st., show a total of 8,585,900 lbs. valued at $1,364,141, an increase over the 1924 season of 3,687,400 lbs., in quantity and approximately half a million dollars in value.

During his tour of Western Canada over the Canadian Pacific lines, Field Marshal Earl Haig was received on all sides by cheering and enthusiastic crowds. At towns in northern Ontario and elsewhere he shook hands and exchanged reminiscences with local ex-service men, many of whom he recognized.

Having concluded his visit to the Pacific Coast, His Excellency Lord Byng, Governor-General of Canada, has returned East. Before leaving the West His Excellency stayed off for a few days at Banff to meet Earl Haig, and the two famous soldiers spent some time together talking over old times.

Considerable interest has been aroused in London, England, over the arrival there of 8,000 peony blooms for exhibition in the Canadian Pacific pavilion at Wembley. The peonies were grown by W. Ormiston Roy of Montreal, and have been sent to England to dispel the belief that Canada's climate is excessively cold.

A delegation of prominent newspaper proprietors and journalists from Great Britain passed through Canada recently on their way to attend the Third Imperial Press Conference to be held at Melbourne, Australia, during September. Besides the delegates from the British Isles, representatives of Canada and the other Dominions have been invited and will attend the conference.

Two automobile accidents occurred in Montreal over the week-end at railway crossings, in both of which it was proven that the car struck the train. In the first accident the car ran into the first car behind the engine and in the second struck the side of the engine itself. Public attention has been directed to these accidents as illustrative of the results of negligent driving.

Early in July a party of one hundred French-Canadians associated with the University of Montreal departed from Windsor station on a three-weeks educational tour of the country under the auspices of the University. Mayor Duquette of Montreal, Monsignor A. V. J. Piette, rector of the University and Professor E. Montpetit one of his associates accompanied the party. They were seen off at the station by E. W. Beatty, K.C., chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other officials.

A similar excursion to the above left Toronto, July 20th, for the benefit of English speaking school-teachers. This tour, also lasting three weeks and covering all principal points of the Dominion was conducted by Dean Sinclair Laird of MacDonald College under the auspices of the Teachers' Federation of Canada.

COMPETITION WITH NEW ZEALAND

Some fears having been expressed in regard to competition with New Zealand in the dairying industry, it may be well to pont out some advantages which this country enjoys as compared with that mentioned. And, parenthetically, the government is keenly alive to this matter of competition, and by educational and other means is endeavoring to get our people to meet it in a scientific and businesslike manner.

In considering our advantages, in the first place we have greater experience in breeding and handling dairy cattle ; more profitable use of he by-products of the dairy, such as skim milk and whey ; lower cost of manufacturing cheese and butter ; nearness of market and lower cost of marketing ; the existence of what is probably the best competitive dairy market in the world in Montreal ; a well-established and economical export business ; an established reputation for cheese ; and excellent dairy schools and systems of field instruction.

This is a gratifying as well as a stimulating list of items in favor of the Canadian producer and exporter. Again, while the New Zealander is grazing his dairy cattle on land costing from $500 to $1,000 an acre, we have very cheap land, and in many districts we can graze our cattle on wild land, on which we do not even pay taxes. In equal marketing conditions New Zealand cannot have any advantage over us ; indeed the shoe is on the other foot.

But New Zealand has been improving ; has been going ahead, while we have been inclined to mark time. We must make up ; take note of conditions and proceed to meet them. Canada has to depend upon her export market for success, and to achieve it, uniformity, quality and quantity are indispensable. If a commodity is uniform ; plentiful and cheap enough, it will sell on the British market, while we have already emphasized the fact that superior grades of any article can never fail to find a ready market.

Grading is a great help. The standard of our grades is not only the same all over Canada, it is as near as we can get to the New Zealand standard, because we realize that we have to compete with them. We are exporting so little, as compared with our total output that we find no difficulty in marketing in Great Britain, but we must improve our products and get better prices. There is always a greater demand for high class dairy products than the supply. The lesson is obvious. We have a magnificent country, enviable opportunities, a sympathetic government, let us make use of them for our own advantage and that of the Dominion as a whole.

A Lad's Plight.

The late Father Vaughan was a democrat, but he was also quite a prince of fashion among clerics. One evening, a boy called on him for advice and appeared to be in a state of some agitation.

"Father," he said, "I want to see you special and private—somewhere quiet."

Father Vaughan took the lad into his private study, and awaited the narration of some spiritual difficulty. But the boy's trouble was not a spiritual one.

"Father," he said, "you ain't got such a thing as a pair of trousers, have you?"

"Why, yes, old chap, I have," answered Father Vaughan. "And, what's more, I've got them on."

The Bait.

The gentleman who kept the milliner's shop in the little country town was a smart business man indeed. He knew just when to strike and just when the iron was hot enough. That was how he had built up such a prosperous business.

"Miss Smith," he said to one of his assistants last Wednesday morning, "do you know anything about the new minister who is coming to the town next week?"

"Yes," replied the girl, "he is a tall, good-looking man, about 28, and he isn't married."

"Is that so?" said the proprietor briskly. "Miss Smith, you may put all the new hats in the shop into the front window right away."

Conditions in the fruit areas of British Columbia are reported as satisfactory. Weather conditions have been good and the trees are healthy.

According to recent reports general conditions in the Maritime Provinces are normal. Potato seeding is about complete. Trees in the Annapolis fruit districts are in good shape and estimates point to a normal crop.

A consignment of lumber from South Westminster, B.C., arrived recently at Dorval, Quebec, on the Canadian Pacific lines, consisting of twenty-nine logs of Douglas Fir, some of which were so long that three flat-cars were required to carry them.

Field Marshal Earl Haig and Countess Haig travelled through western Canada to the Pacific coast over the Canadian Pacific Railway recently, after attending the conference of the British Empire Service League at Ottawa.

"Western Canada has never had better crop prospects than which exist now," stated Ernest G. Cook, of E. Cook, Ltd., Crop Insurance Co., of Moose Jaw, Sask., who recently spent two weeks at Banff, after touring the West and studying crop conditions.

According to "Agricultural and Industrial Progress in Canada" the Department of Trade and Commerce has issued the following comparative statement for 1924 and 1925 trade in the Dominion:—

| Total | 1924 | 1925 |
|---|---|---|
| trade | $1,902,130,164 | $1,878,294,180 |
| Impts. | 893,366,867 | 796,932,537 |
| Expts. | 1,058,763,297 | 1,081,361,643 |
| Fav. Bal. | 165,396,430 | 284,429,106 |

According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics the annual consumption of standing timber for use, amounts to about 2,600,000,000 cubic feet. The loss by fire, insects and fungi about doubles this depletion, and it is estimated that Canadian forests are depleted at the rate of upwards of five and a half billion cubic feet per annum.

For the first time in the history of Canada upwards of three thousand redskins from the four western provinces and Montana journeyed to McLeod, Alberta, early in July, and held an all-Indian celebration and formed a league of plains Indians. Five thousand white people attended the ceremony and watched the Indians stage their spectacular mounted war-dance.

Deep gratification is felt in Canadian Pacific Railway circles over the receipt of the following cablegram sent to President E. W. Beatty by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales:—"Umvuma, South Africa, July 2nd.—Have just heard of Mr. Howard's death. Please convey to relatives my deepest sympathy. (Signed) Edward P." The late Mr. W. B. Howard was twice in charge of the Prince of Wales' train when His Royal Highness travelled over Canadian Pacific lines.

For the second time in the history of the newsprint industry, Canadian output has run ahead of that of the United States. During the month of May Canada produced 130,013 tons of newsprint, as compared with 129,026 tons in the United States. The cumulative production of Canadian mills for the first five months of the current year totals 622,235, which favorably compares with a production of 632,034 in the United States during the same period.

Diamonds Safe From Thieves.

In one of the beautiful parks of the Spanish capital there is an extremely valuable ring, suspended by a silken cord around the neck of the patron saint of Madrid, unguarded by the police or even special watchmen. Although set with diamonds and pearls there is no danger of its being stolen. The most unscrupulous thief in Madrid would not think of purloining it. The ring was made for King Alfonso XII., who gave it to his cousin, the pretty Mercedes, on the day of their betrothal. She wore it continually during her short married life. On her death the king presented it to his grandmother, Queen Christina. She died soon after receiving it, and the king gave the deadly little circle to his sister, the Infanta del Pilar, who died within the month. Next it found a place on the finger of Christina, the youngest daughter of the Duke of Montpensier, but in less than three months she also was dead. Alfonso XII. next placed it in his own casket, and lived less than a year after so doing.

Who Was Sweeney Todd?

He is rather a mythical person and his existence is accounted for largely by unproven legends. The story goes that Sweeney Todd was a barber of Fleet Street, who had an unpleasant way with customers. For, according to tradition, if anyone came for a shave who looked worth robbing, he would seat this man in a chair which would presently capsize and throw the occupant into a well or vault below. There, it was said, he would rob the unfortunate fellow and afterwards dispose of the body to a confederate who kept a pie shop in the adjoining house, whose bakehouse communicated with the vaults of St. Dunstan's Church. While the legends say that Todd was hanged at Tyburn, the annals of Newgate have nothing about him. But Sweeney Todd was sufficiently famous to figure in many old ballads and melodramas.

THE CAREFUL DRIVER

By ERWIN GREER

(President Greer College of Automotive Engineering, Chicago).

Modern automotive comfort equipment presents one way out for the motorist who wishes to avoid "motorits's wrinkles." Devices that adequately control spring recoil immeasurably relieve driving strain. They give a car greater "roadability" and "rideability" and make it vastly easier to steer. Consequently, the man whose car is equipped with them has less occasion for frowning and, all other things being equal, should be much less liable to the typical and much to be deplored 'motorist's wrinkles.'

I have a friend who purchased a car just after he was discharged from the army and that five-year-old car looks and runs today almost as well as most cars do after they have been driven a year.

I asked him how he keeps his machine in such excellent condition and why it was that the original finish was so remarkably good after such a long time.

His answer, I believe, is good to pass along to other car owners. It was summed up in the one word, "Care."

He said that every morning before he started to town he dusted his machine thoroughly with a light cloth dampened with auto polish, washing off any mud that had collected the day before, looked over his tires, tested them with a guage, turned down a grease cup or two and then drove away. This, he said, took him less than ten minutes each morning.

One morning a week he spent an hour or two going over his car more thoroughly. All motor adjustments were attended to at this time and the storage battery was tested with a hydrometer and water was added if needed.

Every month he spent an extra hour or two greasing his car, applying top dressing to the top and side curtains to waterproof and preserve them. Any chipped parts or places starting to rust were touched up with a little air-drying enamel.

The result is that after five years, with only the investment of a little time and a few "car savers" his car is in excellent mechanical condition and from the outward appearance you would think it was almost "brand new."

Britain's Disappearing Woodlands.

Under the power of the woodcutter's axe, the face of England is changing, slowly but surely.

Men and women long exiled from their country return to find that the appearance of some once-beloved place has altered almost beyond recognition in the last few years, writes Katherine Cosort.

The slopes of Leith Hill, once so comfortably, so generously wooded, have in parts been stripped so that where there were secrecy and protection now there are waste and desolation.

Roads which were walled by high trees, giving little revelation of mysterious depths of beauty beyond, are now a busy track between wide acres with pitiful stumps; there is a faint smell of charcoal, but no birds sing.

Is this loss of woodland necessary? Is it impossible to interest English people in their most characteristic possession?

There is happily a growing intoleration of those ugly hoardings which deface our countryside. Famous points of view cannot, in England, easily pass into the hands of the speculative builder. Motorists have a deepening appreciation of the sweet decency of the way side, so that picnic refuse is seen less frequently.

But everywhere woods, which in Britain are part of tradition, part of the very character of the land, are disappearing.

In the days of great estates, landowners had some love and understanding of the old oaks and beeches, the pines and the elms of England. To-day the estates have been broken up and in place of the one owner there may be a hundred owners.

It is to these small landowners that we must appeal to keep the dear face of England unchanged. If woods must be laid waste it ought not to be impossible to interest the new owners of England in making new plantations.—Tit-Bits.

Words We Shouldn't Use.

Indian ink does not come from India and never did. It ought to be called Chinese ink.

Rice-paper is not made from rice or any part of the rice plant.

Train oil is not so called because it is used to lubricate trains. It is a whale oil, and was called "tran" by Scandinavian fishers.

A buttery has nothing to do with butter, but is the place where the butler, or bottler, works.

China is seldom made in that country, and has become a misnomer used in place of porcelain.

Tartan is not a material, but a pattern.

The water-rat is not a rat at all but a vole; nor has the country dance anything to do with the country. It ought to be contre-dance—or opposite dance.

Laughing at the Centuries.

The Foss Dyke, in Lincolnshire, England, which was cut by the Romans, is still in use as a canal.

Victoria's Unique Amusement Centre Officially Opened

Upper—The Swimming-pool.

Lower—A section of the Promenade.

With appropriate pomp and ceremony the Hon. W. G. Nichol, Lieut.-Governor of British Columbia, and D. C. Coleman, Vice-President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, opened Crystal Gardens, Victoria—the largest and finest salt water swimming pool and amusement centre in Canada—recently.

The building takes the form of a winter garden, sunlit by day and glittering by night with an atmosphere heavy with the scent of flowers and throbbing with music from a string orchestra. Built on a two-acre property, facing the fragrant gardens of the Empress Hotel, Crystal Gardens is of generous proportions, with lower portions in brick and concrete, and superstructure of steel and specially designed glass. The interior is a huge conservatory with vines and palms and plants growing in abundance, and in the centre the largest salt water swimming pool on the continent.

To give a Roman Bath effect, from the peacock alley promenades and dancing floors above, there are concrete steps down to the landing of the pool, which is 150 feet long, 40 feet wide and 9 feet deep at its deepest point. Salt water is pumped from Beacon Hill Beach, a distance of nearly a mile, and maintained at a temperature of 70 degrees, and kept in constant circulation. The water is, of course, sterilized, and bathers, before entering the pool, pass under showers of varying temperatures. Among other attractions there are a gymnasium, hot salt water baths, art gallery, two dancing floors and a tea-room.

Anticipating that the present season will see the beginning of a large tourist movement toward Vancouver Island the Canadian Pacific Railway has considerably augmented its service between Vancouver, Victoria and Seattle—The Triangular Route—and their two new steamships, the Princesses Kathleen and Marguerite, are the largest ever placed on the Pacific Coast service.

MIRACLES OF MEMORY

SOME FAMOUS FEATS OF GREAT MUSICIANS.

It Is Doubtful If There Has Ever Been Anyone In the History of Art Whose Musical Memory Was as Marvellous as Mendelssohn's.

This is regarded as pre-eminently an age of "stunts," but so far as music at least is concerned, it is to the past rather than to the present that one must look for the most memorable achievements in this kind. Certainly one never hears of any modern musicians doing things of the astonishing sort recorded so freely in the lives of the old masters.

Take the matter of improvisation, for instance. Thus of Bach one reads that his powers in this respect were unlimited—the inexhaustible flow of his invention being combined invariably with the most rigorous regard for form. Schweitzer tells us that if he improvised for as long as two hours together, the theme remained the same from beginning to end.

The well-known story of his performing before Frederick the Great may be recalled in this connection. The old king, himself a keen music lover, conning the daily list of arrivals in the capital, announced, with glee, "Gentlemen, old Bach is come"; and the great composer had to present himself forthwith at Potsdam, without having time even to change his travelling clothes, and there delighted and astonished all hearers by his marvellous extemporizations, on themes furnished by the king.

No less famous in the same way was Bach's great contemporary, Handel. It is recorded that when pressed for time he did not even trouble to write out the solo parts in his organ concertos, trusting entirely to his powers of improvising to provide what was required when the time came.

But Handel's most memorable achievement—perhaps in its way the most astounding in all musical history—was, of course, the writing of "The Messiah" in little over three weeks! The thing would indeed be almost unbelievable if it were not attested beyond dispute by the dates on the autograph score now preserved in Buckingham Palace, which show the work to have been begun on August 22nd, 1741, and completed on September 14th.

It may be assumed, of course, that Handel had given thought to the music and worked it out to some extent beforehand. There are, indeed, some preliminary sketches in the Fitzwilliam Museum which prove this. And also he borrowed from some of his previous works for four or five numbers. But allowing for all this, it was none the less a truly amazing tour de force to pen the entire score—and what a score!—in so brief a period.

By comparison with this achievement, Mozart's famous feat of writing the overture to "Don Giovanni" on the night before the first performance might be reckoned almost of small account—especially as in this case it may be quite certainly taken for granted that the music was finished in the composer's head down to the smallest detail before he set pen to paper, for this was Mozart's invariable practice.

Everyone will remember the story, which of course, has not lacked romantic embellishment—to the effect that his faithful wife sat up with him plying him with punch and keeping him from falling asleep by telling him fairy tales, and so on. But as to the main fact that the overture was actually written at the very last moment there appears to be no doubt.

And, needless to say, this was one only of many equally astonishing performances ascribed to one of the most marvellously gifted of all musicians. Another, for instance, was his feat of memorizing the whole of the famous Miserere of Allegri after hearing it once only in the Sistine Chapel at Rome. This he did during Holy Week of 1770, when he was paying his first visit to Italy as a boy of fourteen!

Subsequently Mendelssohn, who perhaps most closely resembled Mozart in his almost supernatural musical endowment as a youth, performed the same feat, paying special attention in this case to the Abbellimenti, or decorative details of the music, which he reproduced with the most astonishing accuracy.

But it is doubtful if there has ever been anyone in the whole history of the art whose musical memory was so marvellous as Mendelssohn's. We are told, says a writer in John o' London's Weekly, that he hardly ever needed a score on any occasion whatever, and it is authentically recorded of him that shortly before his death he played through from memory the whole of Beethoven's ninth symphony—a truly prodigious feat.

Another well-attested anecdote of Mendelssohn tells how on one occasion when he was rehearsing without score a chorus from Bach's Matthew Passion, he called out a certain point: "Please note that at the 23rd bar the sopranos have C and not C sharp."

What is one to say again of some of Schubert's feats? Everyone knows, for instance, the story of how he wrote the "Erl King." Spaun, one of his old schoolfellows, happened to call on him one afternoon and found him in a state of great excitement over Goethe's ballad, which he had just seen for the first time. A few readings sufficed him, and an hour or two later one of the most wonderful of all songs had been written, and the same evening saw it actually performed for the first time.

Equally well known is the story of the composition of another of the master's loveliest songs—the exquisite setting of Shakespeare's "Hark, Hark! the Lark!" which was actually written in a beer-garden, on the back of a bill of fare, the product of an absolutely instantaneous inspiration.

Most Famous Chinese Dish.

What has been considered by Oriental epicures as the daintiest dish in China, the birds' nest, is the product of the sea swallow, which constructs its nest of a gelatinous substance taken from sea moss. The Chinese method of preparing the nests for the table is to soak them and boil them in milk until they are very tender. Then they are placed in clear soup and are ready for use. On his trip to China, General Grant was much feted, and one of the dishes set before him was the birds' nest.

SITTING BULL.

Chief and Medicine Man of the Dakota Sioux.

Sitting Bull, a chief and medicine man of the Dakota Sioux, was born on Willow Creek in what is now North Dakota, about the year 1837. His father was a chief named Jumping Bull. Sitting Bull gained great influence among the reckless and unruly young Indians, and during the American Civil War led attacks on white settlements in Iowa and Minnesota. Although he pretended to make peace in 1866, from 1869 to 1876 he frequently attacked whites or Indians friendly to whites. His refusal to return to the reservation in 1876 led to the campaign in which the United States general, George A. Custer, was killed and his command cut to pieces.

Fearing punishment for his participation in what was practically a massacre, Sitting Bull, with a large band of his warriors, moved northward across the International Boundary into what was then the Northwest Territories of Canada. This imposed an arduous and dangerous duty upon the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, who, although few in number compared with Sitting Bull's followers, had to see that these Indians did not use Canada as a base for operations against the American citizens of Dakota, and that they did not crowd Canadian Indians off their reserves.

The work was ably looked after by the late Inspector Walsh, who made Sitting Bull and his followers understand that they must keep the peace in Canada and not use the country or any supplies they obtained to make trouble for the United States. They were allowed only sufficient ammunition to hunt and so obtain food. They tried to intimidate the police, but failing, they accepted the situation. By degrees by 1881 these Sioux had returned to the United States, Sitting Bull among the number, and after 1883 he made his home at the Standing Rock Agency. About five years later there was great unrest among these Sioux, caused in part by the sale of their lands. In the latter part of 1889 the United States authorities determined to arrest Sitting Bull as a precaution. He was surprised and captured by Indian police and soldiers on Grand river on December 15, 1890, and was killed while his companions were attempting to rescue him.

Ermine.

The European weasel in his winter costume was the original purveyor of ermine. The snowy white pelt, set off by the jet black at the end of the tail, attracted attention centuries ago and was adopted as the royal costume for the kings of England. It is said that Edward III. forbade its use by any one not of royal blood. This ancient royal costume adorns the "king" in packs of playing cards. Later it became the distinguishing fur of nobility, and especially of judges, who represent the royal power, were regarded merely as the king himself acting through his agents in dealing justice among his people. As showing their imperial power, ermine is worn in the official regalia of the pope and the cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church.

Flax.

In very early times flax was grown in Egypt and manufactured into cloth. It was known to the Israelites, and was probably carried to Asia from Egypt. It was carried to Gaul, now France about the year 1 B.C., and from Gaul it reached Britain.

Flax was ordered to be grown in England by statute passed in 1538 in the reign of Henry VII. For many years the core of the flax plant was separated from the bark by hand. A mallet was next used, and then a water-mill was invented in Scotland about the year 1750.

Natives of Panama

The forests of the Republic of Panama are interspersed by trails radiating generally from some seaport village. The trails are passable only for pedestrians and the small native pony which is used as a pack animal. At intervals along those trails live the "muy pauvre" natives, in appearance Indian, and Spanish speaking. They hunt in the jungle and till the soil, growing just sufficient for their own needs.

They live in bamboo "casas" thatched with palm leaves and sleep on elevated stages, beneath which they light a smudge before retiring, otherwise sleep would be impossible on account of the myriads of mosquitos. The natives are consequently "smoked" from childhood and it is difficult to discern any trace of white blood among them, though such probably exists.

They are a harmless, polite, and hospitable people. The presence of white people in this territory is common. Some are owners of large rubber or banana plantations, others are the class of white which turns "native," intermarries, and lives as they do.

Those natives, however, do not inhabit the whole of the republic. A class of native of the same color but otherwise very different is known as the San Blas Indian. They are a small, sturdy people not unlike the Japanese physically.

They occupy a territory extending north from the border of the Republic of Colomba, to a point some ten miles south of the old paved road accredited to the buccaneer, Morgan, and which at one time connected Colon and the city of Old Panama.

The jealousy with which the San Blas Indians guard their tribe from admixture and their peculiar tribal laws, on the observance of which they are adamant, has been the theme of writers who succeeded in glimpsing a tithe of their secrets ere they were escorted to the border.

Though the San Blas Indian is adverse to the intrusion of the white man on his domain, he invades the white man's citadel without apology. He may be found in any village, or even in Colon and Panama purchasing his supplies, not with the coin of the realm—a small muslin sack, a former tobacco container filled with gold washed from the creeks of his jungle, is his currency. The sight of this gold, and the deduction that his territory was gold-bearing resulted in many attempts by the white man to invade the San Blas country.

Singly and in groups the prospectors marched into the jungle and returned—some of them—without ambition to renew the quest. One group composed of miners and soldiers of fortune, equipped with modern arms, went forth confident of over-awing the San Blas.

From the moment they entered the forbidden land they felt that they were under continuous observation, but finding that nothing untoward happened, continued to prospect the creeks.

Their first experience of the country being inhabited was when an Indian stepped silently from the jungle into their midst and stated that he was there to conduct them before the chief. In the parley that followed the chief told them of all their actions since entering the San Blas domain, he told them to go back whence they came, and that guides would be provided to show them the shortest route.

The white men refused to return and told the chief that they were not afraid of the San Blas Indians. Next evening, when the prospectors returned to their camp, two of their number expired in dreadful agony after drinking water from the nearby creek. Two days later two more of their number dropped in the trail from small poisoned arrows silently directed by blow-pipes from the jungle. Again another man disappeared whose fate was unknown.

Of what avail were high-powered rifles in such a dilemma. No enemy was visible to wreak vengeance on.

The hardened adventurers who had faced death in many climes weakened and fled precipitately convinced of the futility of coping with their silent enemy. Other attempts proved equally abortive. The subterfuge of hunting for a particular species of wild animal or of studying the flora and fauna was tried; a native attached himself to the party until their ambitions were satisfied and then conducted them over the border.

It has been said that the San Blas are the only tribe of aborigines who have ever successfully retained possession of a property which was coveted by the white man.

One of their tribal laws is that a San Blas woman marrying other than one of her tribe is banished from their country. Rare instances have occurred of the San Blas woman dallying with the foreigner and in every instance the sentence of banishment was rigidly executed.

There are in those countries a kind of abnormity, individuals who are spotted or, as it is termed in Spanish pinto (painted). Large blotches of white appear on the hands, face and body, some having almost one-half the face white and the other half its proper copper brown.

This is not due to any strain of white blood in such individual. The white patches are not the Caucasian white, they are chalky, lustreless and too white.

It may be that such cases were isolated by the San Blas and by intermarrying through generations established the bleached Indians discovered by scientists.

Baneful Effect of Bad Temper.

Bad temper, an eminent pathologist has discovered, has the strange effect of increasing the amount of sugar in the blood by 10 per cent. to 30 per cent. in the course of a few minutes. That is why an angry man wants to fight the object of his rage. He becomes hot-blooded because the accession of carbonaceous material intoxicates his muscular system. The strange thing is that this rapid change is due to a tiny gland about the size of a pin. When it functions normally a person remains calm and even-tempered. If the essence exudes too lavishly, hatred, passion, and quarrels ensue.

Pulp and Paper In Newfoundland.

According to the census of 1921 of Newfoundland, there were then in that Dominion capital amounting to $16,982,000 invested in pulp and paper factories; the value of buildings and plant, $9,497,000; number of employes of all classes, 2,283; total of wages paid yearly, $2,584,000; value of goods manufactured, $4,148,150.

The Scot's Porridge.

Porridge is passing as a staple article of diet in Scotland. It is giving place to ham and eggs. The Scottish Board of Agriculture, enquiring into the causes for this change in the national diet, is informed that ham and eggs for breakfast has become popular and the housewife will not be bothered to put on porridge as well. An eminent professor has declared porridge is an injurious diet, and tends to the development of rickets. On the other hand, the medical officer of health for Edinburgh is positive that while porridge may be troublesome to prepare, it furnishes ample compensation in the good foundation which is thus laid for a heavy day's work. The professor's condemnation of porridge, it seems, results from experiments he made upon puppies. They were fed on porridge and became rickety. Against this it is asserted that the puppies were kept in cages, got no exercise or fresh air and sunshine. If one regards the shepherd's collie, however, it is claimed that it provides a standing testimonial in the lower animal kingdom to the virtues of a porridge diet. From the day it is weaned it is fed on porridge and milk—very often the leavings from the plate of the shepherd.

British Sailor's Uniform.

The evolution of the sailor's uniform has been gradual. The sailor, indeed, originally went to sea dressed as he pleased, and though later he was made to wear some sort of uniform, it varied in ship to ship with the individual taste of each captain. It was not until comparatively late years that the whole navy got its uniform. Since its introduction, the uniform has altered very little. The old-time sailor needed to roll his trousers to do his work, and the navy man to-day still wears baggy trousers. The sailors used to have his hair in a pigtail, so he had to have a collar to protect his dress from the grease with which it was made up. So came our "sailor's collar." The three stripes on this collar are popularly said to commemorate the three greatest victories of Admiral Nelson (the Nile, Copenhagen, Trafalgar), but the weight of evidence is rather that the stripes were added merely to make a uniform relief to the collar.

Women Soldiers.

In Turkey all citizens who have reached their majority and are mentally sound enjoy equal rights without distinction of sex or religion.

With this equality has come about the emancipation of women, and not only do they enjoy equal rights with men, but also have equal duties. The Turkish army is open to women, and large numbers of sturdy daughters of a sturdy race have been enrolled in the ranks.

Military promotions are available to them just as if they were men—so that the Turkish army is to-day the only army in the world that can boast of two women colonels and about a hundred women officers of junior ranks.

The Saw.

The saw is said to have been invented in ancient Rome by a man named Talus. He came upon the jaw-bone of a large snake, and employed it to cut through a piece of wood. He then formed an instrument of iron similar to the snake's jaw-bone, and this was the first metal saw. Saw-mills came into existence in Central Europe early in the fifteenth century.

Tamworth Defeats Odessa.

On Wednesday afternoon, at Odessa, the Tamworth team defeated Odessa by the score of 14-3 in one of the best games of the season. There were very few errors on either side, but there was plenty of htting, which pleased the fans. There was a little trouble following the game but things were smoothed out to the satisfaction of everybody.

Barn Burned.

During the storm on Tuesday morning Arthur VanSlyck's barn at Morven was destroyed by fire from lightning. A barn belonging to Albert Herrington, North Fredericksburgh, was also struck ad set on fire but prompt action put the fire out.

Killed at Tamworth.

Mr. Alf Milligan, one of the best known and highly respected residents of Tamworth was killed on Friday, July 10th by being crushed against a wall of his saw mill. The accident happened while Mr. Mlligan was using a plank used to start the water wheel which caught in the fly wheel pinning Mr. Milligan against the wall and crushing his life out. A widow and six daughters are left to mourn his sudden death.

The contractor, Mr. Geo. Mr. Vandewater is to be congratulated on the excellent building he has erected. It is two stories and basement, solid brick walls, heavy timber beams and joists, and cement foundation and cellar, with hardwood floors both up and down stairs. The oven is completed and ready for use, and Messrs. Ross & Miller have a quantity of machinery already in place, and the necessary shafting is being erected. The plumbing still remains to be completed, and office partitions erected. Everything is expected to be finished in about three weeks.

Napanee Visits Trenton.

A team of fourteen players, members of the Napanee Golf Club, journeyed to Trenton to engage in a friendly contest with a team of the Trenton Club, Wednesday afternoon. A very good game was played and the Napanee players appreciate the cordial reception tendered to them. Following is the result of the game:

Napanee—Capt. D. Ham, 0; G. S. Curtis, 1; W. J. Wiggins, 1; J. W. Robinson, 0; D. B. White, 1; A. L. Dafoe, 1; M. P. Graham, ½; H. W. Huffman, 1; W. VanDusen, 1; E. C. Roswell, 1; F. J. Roblin, 0; Wilfred Wilson, 0; A. S. Kimmerly, 1; W. McLaughlin, 1; total 9½.

Inspecting Rest Camps.

Dr. J. C. Maloney, of Ottawa, M. O. H. for Eastern Ontario, and Dr. G. A. H. Burn, Provincial Sanitary Engineer of the Ontario Department of Health, were in Napanee one day last week. The gentlemen are compiling a report for the Ontario Government on the number and condition of rest camps throughout the Province, with the idea of formulating certain regulations respecting these places and fixing the minimum of equipment which shall be placed therein. The gentlemen were very much pleased with the camp at Napanee. The situation was ideal and with a little more grading and filling it will be one of the best of the smaller camps in the province. The sanitary equipment, of which Dr. Maloney takes special notice, is not up to the standard which he wou[illegible] recommend, and an incinera[illegible] is needed, if we are to have a rest camp at all patronized freely by tourists who nearly all spend a certain amount of money in town for supplies. The camp is not a detriment to our hotels, as a tourist who leaves home with the intention of camping will not patronize hotels anyway, but will stop at the best rest camp he can find or hear of. One thing the province is likely to insist on in the regulations is that some official shall look after these camps and be responsible for their condition.

A WORD TO ALL IN REGARD TO CHAUTAUQUA TICKETS

In order to bring Chautauqua to Napanee, the Local Committee have to guarantee the Redpath Chautauqua Co. $1250.00. They also have to take care of local expenses such as newspaper advertising, cartage of tents, etc., amounting to about $125.00. This means that the Committee have to sell 550 Season Tickets before they are even. The agreement is that all Season Tickets sold previous to the opening of Chautauqua apply in full on the guarantee. Of the gate receipts, however, the local committee receives only 25 per cent. as its share. You can readily see therefore the necessity for the sale of the Season Tickets. If you buy $5.00 worth of gate tickets, the local committee are credited with only $1.25. If you buy a $2.50 Season's Ticket (which entitles you to every afternoon and evening performance) the full amount goes to the credit of the Local Committee. Please help the Local Committee.

Remember this is not a money making proposition. A motion is on the books that if any profit accrues, it will be devoted to some charitable or patriotic purpose.

Chautauqua is recognized all over the continent as one of the greatest educative influences as well as the best kind of entertainment to be had. The Chautauqu brings to you the World's greatest talent. It costs money to do so, but where else, and in what other way can you possibly secure as much for the sum of $2.50?

In Napanee in the winter there are many and varied attractions, but in the summer we have very few attractions for those who must remain at home, or for visitors in our community.

Napanee cannot continue to bring Chautauqua unless both its citizens and the people of the surrounding country rally to its help and buy Season Tickets. We must ask for your co-operation.

Yours very truly,

SIZE OF EGG IMPORTANT

We have it on the authority of no less a person than the Dominion Poultry Husbandman, that the problem of small eggs is becoming more and more pronounced the longer the breeding for high egg production is continued. Thus is becomes necessary, as he further says in his report for 1924, that the greatest care in selecting a male to head the flock should be taken to see that he is from large egg stock. Records do not show that a high producing bird is bound to lay a small egg, but they indicate that unless careful selection is followed there is a decided tendency for the size of eggs to decrease as production increases. A bird that does not lay eggs that average 24 ounces to the dozen cannot be registered no matter how many eggs she may lay. Attention to this matter of size, as well as to heavy yield, is being given by the Poultry Division at Ottawa and data is being collected that will be made public, as the report says, in due season.

TO VISIT ROME

Rev. T. P. O'Connor, the beloved pastor of St. Patrick's Church, left on Saturday on a pilgrimage to Rome, where he will take part in the Holy Year exercises and receive the Papal blessing.

Following the services on Sunday of last week the congregation presented Father O'Connor with a generous purse. The following address accompanied the purse:

Napanee, July 12th, 1925.

Dear Father O'Connor,—

The congregation of St. Patrick's are assembled here this morning after assisting at the Divine Sacrifice on this, the eve of your departure on a voyage to the Holy City, to offer our prayers and best wishes for a safe and pleasant trip, and we hope and pray that you may realize your cherished desire to meet the Holy Father and receive from him the Papal blessing and the privilege of imparting it to your devoted people here.

Your return will be looked for with trusting hearts that you may not be longer than will be ample time for you to obtain the much needed and well earned rest from your unceasing labors for both our temporal and spiritual welfare.

We would ask you also to accept this purse as a slight token of our appreciation of your kindness and interest in all matters pertaining to the welfare and contentment of your people.

Need we say more, dear Father, than repeat that our prayers go with you for a very pleasant and safe voyage and a realization of its every promise and hope and pray for many long years of good health for you to minister to your devoted people of St. Patrick's of Napanee.

Signed on behalf of the Congregation of St. Patrick's Church,

P. GLEESON,
D. J. HOGAN,
R. McNEILL,
Church Committee.

Rev. Father O'Connor made an eloquent and feeling reply, expressing the harmony and good feeling which characterized the congregation under his charge. He reminded his hearers of the kind demonstration of esteem expressed in the address. For nineteen years he had enjoyed the quiet peace of unity and harmony as pastor of St. Patrick's church, and as a citizen among all classes and denominations of the community.

Today, you, in the goodness of your hearts, you are honoring me in giving public expression to kindliest sentiments of sincere good wishes, which could only be inspired by the charity of christian hearts.

The Reverend Father closed his remarks by giving his blessing to all present, and expressng the wish that they would all be happy and enjoy good health during his absence.

The First "Yard."

More than eight hundred years ago, King Henry, surnamed Beauclerc, reigned in England.

Early in his reign gray-bearded councillors declared that in their opinion it would be nice to have a measure of length called a yard; and this should be the distance between the tip of royal Henry's nose and the end of the royal thumb.

The king's nose may have been large or small or tilted upward. Moreover, the distance may have been measured when the king's nose was swollen, for royal noses can hit a door-post in the dark just like common noses. And the royal thumb may have been stubby or spatulate.

Henry, too, might have playfully extended his fingers and wiggled them with his thumb not quite at, but very near, the end of his royal nose; or he might have wiggled eight fingers with the thumb of one hand touching the little finger of the other. Twirling his fingers thus he could delicately convey to the court scientists who were conducting the royal triangulation just what he thought of them. But at all costs the deed was done and the Englishmen of the twelfth century achieved a yard.

We of the twentieth century, especially our wives, our daughters, our sisters and our maiden aunts, should never forget that every time we buy a yard of ribbor we measure more or less accurately the distance between a defunct ex-royal nose and a departed ex-royal thumb. The complete arithmetic does not say all this; but then, as we have previously noted, the arithmetic is less complete than it ought to be.

Wanted a "Piper."

An English M.P. was recently the guest of a Highland chief. On the first night of his visit his host asked him if there was anything he would like in the morning. The M.P. replied that he liked a paper first thing in the morning, and retired to rest without noticing his host's look of astonishment.

Next morning he was wakened by a terrific burst of native music outside his bedroom.

"What are you making that infernal row for?" demanded the M.P.

"Deil tak' it," replied the astounded Gael. "Ye askit ta laird for a piper, an' tho' Ah ses it that shuldnae ye've gotten ta best piper in ta clan!"

Mr. James A. Hosey, of Mt. Carmel, Pa., a former well-known resident of Napanee, writes us advising our readers to purchase their supplies of coal as soon as possible, as a suspension of work in the Anthracite mines is a probability in the near future.

On Wednesday last Master Reginald Chapman had the misfortune to have one of his legs badly fractured by being crushed between a belt and a pulley at his father's brick works on the river road. Dr. T. M. Galbraith was called and after giving first aid, the patient was taken to Kingston General Hosptal. The boy has one bone in his leg broken in four places and the other bone in two places.

Descendants of Paul and Solomon Huff have completed the organization of the Huff Family Association, and will meet in Belleville in August. Paul and Solomon Huff were two U. E. Loyalists who came over to this country after the War of Independence and settled in Adolphustown, June 16th, 1784. Paul Huff is entitled to a great deal of the credit for the erection of the first Methodist church in Upper Canada. He gave the land upon which to erect it, contributed £10, and personally assisted in its erection, in 1792. The old church is still standing.

The Quinte Lady, a large gasoline cabin cruser, owned by Thos. McWain, Deseronto, came to grief in last Thursday's storm. The boat was swamped at Thompson's Point. The occupants, Messrs. Wm. Sherman and Wm. Maracle, of Deseronto, had a close call, but were rescued by Judge J. E. Madden who put out to their rescue with a rowboat from his summer camp near the point. Mr. A. H. Carman also rendered assistance by towing the disabled craft from deep water to shallow water near the shore. Several other pleasure boats caught in the storm received more or less damage.

The excursionists who were on the steamer Brockville with Grace Church Sunday School on Thursday last, will not soon forget their experience. The boat was caught in the storm and for a time it was an exceedingly rough trip, with the rain coming down in torrents. The sight of three men on top of a capsized boat off Thompson's Point, and whom the crew of the Brockville were unable to help, was also a depressing sight. The boat could not make Glen Island, but was forced to continue to Picton. After the storm was over the excursion went to Glen Island where the sports for the young people were held.

OUR DAIRYING INTERESTS

The National Dairy Council, an organization of dairymen extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific, exists in addition to the provincial organizations. Its chief functions are to keep track of the general dairy interests of Canada; to propose any new or amended legislation that they think is required, and to see that the law is observed. Their work is of an educational character, but they are keenly on the lookout for anything that would prejudice the industry.

According to Hon. W. R. Motherwell, Minister of Agriculture, some adulterating has been going on, chiefly with cocoanut oils. Very little is done in the creameries, but in the cities there are people who make a business of buying butter and adulterating it, a practice that calls for the severest penalties.

The Minister spoke frankly on the subject of dairying not long ago, and told the dairymen of Ontario and Quebec that if they did not improve the quality of their butter, the first thing they knew Australia and New Zealand would be opening warehouses in Toronto, Montreal and other large centres, and offering their goods to Canadians. He did not know that that would be an unmixed evil, but it would be rather a strong commentary on the quality of our home made butter if Australia could do such a thing successfully.

There is improvement in sight. Ontario has taken the first required step toward better results by providing for a good raw product through the grading of cream. Certain educational work remains to be done in the improvement if dairying conditions, but if we get the raw product in good shape we can then insist on the manufacturers turning out a good article.

There will never be a glut of first-class dairy products and that is another incentive to speed up the improvement of our quality as quickly as possible. Every country that can go in successfully for dairying is going to engage more and more in this branch of agriculture. The prairie provinces, for instance were never thought to be good dairy countries, yet they have enormously increased their output of creamery butter; while our cheese vies with the best Australian. In fact our best is away better than the best Australian product.

What is wanted is uniformity, and, taken all round, Canada can extend the butter and cheese industries to a very great extent, with the help that the Department is most anxious to afford.

SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE AND HOME ECONOMICS

Two school courses that the young people of this County have not previously had the opportunity of attending, are being planned for this winter, beginning December 1st and ending March 1st, a period of three months. But before final arrangements are made, it will be necessary to have the promise of forty students for each course. For boys and young men, a complete three months' course in Agriculture will be given. Subjects of study will include live stock, farm crops soils, chemistry, bacteriology, fruit growing, flowers, vegetables, dairying, poultry, bees, weeds, insects, fungus pests, farm mechanics, forestry, farm management and English. For girls, the Course in Home Economics will cover foods and cookery, household administration, houseplanning and decoration, home nursing and first aid, sewing and millinery. Competent instructors for these classes will be provided by the Department of Agriculture.

It is quite likely that at least one of these courses would be conducted at the Collegiate Institute, which is being enlarged and to the staff of which has been added a teacher with special training in agriculture.

An opportunity such as these courses offer is seldom to be had except where an agricultural college or domestic science school is located. All boys and girls who are not taking the regular high school course, and those who have passed through high school, should be enrolled in one of the special classes. In fact these courses are planned for any young men or young women between the ages of fifteen and thirty. In order to make necessary preparation and arrange for the teaching staff, all young people who expect to attend one of these classes, must send in their names to J. Laughland, Agricultural Representative, Napanee, before July 18th.

There is no question about the value of courses of this kind and apart from the regular studies the two classes will have an opportunity for development along social, literary and athletic lines. The value of these courses to Lennox and Addington depends on the attitude of the people towards them. If there is indifference, there will be no classes; other counties will have them. Rapid action is needed. Any young man or young woman who can possibly arrange to attend one of these courses for three months during the coming winter should forward the name immediately.

"They say unto Him (Jesus) all men seek for Thee," Mark 1-37; "And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand, and touched him (a leper) and saith unto him, "I will; be thou clean." Mark 1-41; "And Jesus said unto them, 'Come ye after me, and I will make you to become firshers of men' and straightway they forsook their nets and followed Him." Mark 1- 17 and 18; "When Jesus heard it He saith unto them, 'They that are whole have no need of a physician, but they that are sick; I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance'." Mark 2-17.

He died, He lives, He reigns, He pleads,
There's love in all His acts and deeds;
All that a guilty sinner needs,
Is Jesus.

CROPS AND POLITICS

It might not be an uninteresting speculation to consider what relation, if any, exists between crops and politics, and how this fall's wheat yield may affect a general election, if one is held. But, let the crop be good, midding or bad, Liberals should not be depressed or down-hearted. If by-elections are any indication, although too much reliance should not be placed on them, the party should have little to fear. The real source of strength, however, lies in organization.

Nor must the Nova Scotia debacle cause undue uneasiness. While the result is to be regretted, it is perfectly understood that the swing of the pendulum was due to local causes. The provincial government had apparently grown somewhat stale; the organization had developed a sort of sleeping sickness and had relaxed into a state of torpor, while their opponents were vigorous, the machine was well oiled and much was to be gained by victory. A long and disastrous industrial dispute capped the climax and after forty years and more, the Liberal party found themselves overthrown.

Taking everything into consideration, therefore, there is no need for pessimism. Courage to overcome handicaps must come from within the ranks of the party. If Liberals througout the country determine to win they have the consolatory fact that they have the ability, the policies and the leader.

But a bumper wheat crop will be no hindrance and should help the cause. People do not readily wish for a change when matters are going well; when the outlook is favorable. Elements of unrest of a very serious nature influenced the result in the east, but in the west people are on a much better footing than they have been for years. The government has helped the farmer, and since they came into office, agriculture has greatly benefitted. On the other hand, the policy and aim of Mr. Meighen's followers would lay a burden on the land workers, who have had enough lean years as it is.

The wheat crop this year is estimated at 350,000,000 bushels and this constitutes the main indication of improved business conditions. Orders are already reaching the large centres based on this outlook. These include luxuries which the western farmer never thought of in the old days.

If the farmer prospers, business is good and with decreased competition from other world sources of supply, everything seems bright. Russia is practically out of the picture as a rival, while the United States will probably consume all the wheat raised in that country. India's exportable surplus will not weigh heavily in the balance, but yields in Europe may be better than the average.

However, let the present good government continue in office and follow the good crop. It is difficult to see what advantage could be gained by a change at this time, but success depends upon hard work and organization.

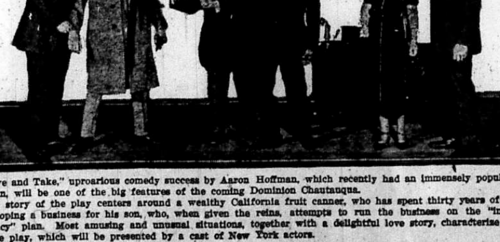
"Give and Take," Sparkling Comedy, a Chautauqua Feature



"Give and Take," uproarious comedy success by Aaron Hoffman, which recently had an immensely popular New York run, will be one of the big features of the coming Dominion Chautauqua.

The story of the play centers around a wealthy California fruit canner, who has spent thirty years of his life in developing a business for his son, who, when given the reins, attempts to run the business on the "industrial democracy" plan. Most amusing and unusual situations, together with a delightful love story, characterise this irresistible play, which will be presented by a cast of New York actors.

"Loved and Lost"

By

BERTHA M. CLAY

Author of "A Sinful Secret," "A Golden Heart,"
"Lover and Husband," "A Gypsy's Daughter," Etc.

"I have a special license, Gwen, and, moreover, we have both been more than the required length of time in this parish."

"Oh!" she said rather dubiously. "You have arranged everything then?"

"Of course. Would you mind trying on your wedding-ring, to make sure it fits?"

Gwendolyn's eyes flashed, and her color rose. But when he stooped down and kissed her, she suddenly laid her hand on his breast and burst into tears.

"I begin to think you don't love me a bit, Gwen," he said, caressing her tenderly; "or that you look upon me as a kind of ogre, who is not to be trusted with a woman's happiness."

"You know it isn't that."

"Then what is it?"

"Marriage is a great change, and a great risk," she stammered out at last.

"Of course it is a change, dear love; but it cannot be any risk when you have a man of honor to deal with, and know yourself to be truly valued and beloved."

"Yes," she said desperately; "but I am afraid I shall often trouble about that lady I saw at Borton Hall."

Colonel Dacre changed color visibly.

"I thought you had promised me never to think about or mention her again, Gwen? I do solemnly swear over again that no woman living, excepting yourself, can ever say that I have asked her to be my wife. I had a good many foolish fancies as a lad, but none of them went as far as that."

"Was she one of your foolish fancies?" inquired Lady Gwendolyn hesitatingly.

"I don't know whom you mean by she, but I can answer for it that my 'foolish fancies' are all married, and the mothers of families by this time."

"Then you haven't had any lady?" she asked, with timid but anxious earnestness.

"Not for the last ten years, on my word."

"And the lady at Borton——" she persisted.

"Was a myth, or an imposter, and need not trouble you for a moment."

"I thought you said she was probably a madwoman who had delusions?" observed Lady Gwendolyn, who appeared to have stored up carefully the lightest word her lover had spoken on the subject.

"Did I say that?" he returned, slightly embarrassed. "Well, it may be so; and all the better if it were, as she would not be likely to trouble you again."

"Will she now, do you suppose?"

"No, my love; I'll take care about that, when once you are in my charge. Besides, you may be sure that if she is not right in her mind, she has been put under confinement by this time."

"It is to be hoped so, because—don't be angry with me, Lawrence—but if she were to claim you after we were married, I should not feel that I ought to stay with you a minute longer."

"Then the ravings of a maniac would drive you out of your home, even after we had been all in all to each other; and you ought to have learned to trust me."

"I am afraid it would. To take another woman's place would be such a terrible wrong. Indeed, I don't think I ought to marry you at all, only—only I am so wicked, so horrible. I would rather be your wife a little while than never at all. And you swear that you are free?"

"I swear it!" he answered solemnly and firmly.

"Then I won't trouble about all these horrors any more. After all, any man might be married secretly—who is to know? And you always must trust to his word, mustn't you? If I had never seen that woman at Borton Hall, it would not have occurred to me to ask the question. I should have made so sure it was all right."

"And it is all right now, you foolish child. Do I look like a malefactor and a scoundrel?"

"No; you look very nice," Lady Gwendolyn admitted, with a blush.

"But not nice enough to be trusted, it seems. However, I'll teach you later, my love; en attendant, you may as well fix our wedding day."

"This day three months," said Lady Gwendolyn demurely; "unless you think that too soon."

"You little witch! If you don't take care I will insist upon its taking place in three days!" retorted Colonel Dacre.

"But I am not obliged to obey."

"Oh! I shall use coercive measures. But seriously, very seriously, Gwen, you are paining me by all these objections. If you don't love me, leave me. Heaven knows I do not want an unwilling wife; but if you pretend to care for me, act up to your profession. I have put you to the test, and if you fail me, I shall get away out of the country as fast as I can, and try and forget the woman who has spoiled my whole life. I have made all my arrangements to leave England on Wednesday. Will you come with me or not? I warn you fairly that I am not poor-spirited enough ever to give you another chance of fooling me. If once I leave you behind, we shall never meet again on this side of the grave."

His decided tone startled Gwendolyn. She saw she had found a lover at last who would not be played fast and loose with, and she began to respect Colonel Dacre as much as she had loved him.

To have parted with him forever would have broken her heart outright, and as she could only keep him one way, she must make the sacrifice he demanded.

To do Lady Gwendolyn justice, she was not wont to give grudgingly when she did give. So that having decided to accord what he asked, she made the gift sweeter by the grace with which she gave. All his long life Colonel Dacre would remember the smile that lighted up her blushing face as she put her hand into his, and murmured:

A Sweet Breath at all times!
THE FLAVOR LASTS
WRIGLEY'S
P.K.
SUGAR COATED
After eating or smoking Wrigley's freshens the mouth and sweetens the breath. Nerves are soothed, throat is refreshed and digestion aided. So easy to carry the little packet!
WRIGLEY'S
-after every meal!

"I will marry you when you like, Lawrence, and trust you whatever betide."

If Lady Gwenodlyn had kept the second promise as she kept the first, how much sorrow it would have saved them both.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Happy Bride.

Mrs. Venable was a very kind, motherly woman, but there was one inconvenience—in sojourning with a person who knew her antecedents so well—her visitor found.

Colonel Dacre had just hinted at some misunderstanding between Lord Teignmouth and Lady Gwendolyn, and allowed Mrs. Venable to lay it all to the countess; but, of course, knowing how much attached the brother and sister had once been, Mrs. Venable did feel a little curious as to the cause of their breach, and tried hard to find it out without actually putting the question.

Lady Gwendolyn got out of the traps laid for her gallantly, but she began to think Mrs. Venable was playing into her lover's hand. She would not have put off her wedding-day now on any account.

Colonel Dacre was fully occupied in the intervening days. He had to run down to Borton Hall to attend to some last arrangements there, and this day seemed so terribly long to Lady Gwendolyn that it was quite a revelation to her. It was wonderful happiness to remember that soon they never need be parted, and she would belong altogether to him.

The wedding was to be a very quiet one. Under the circumstances this was very desirable, and, fortunately, it chimed in with the tastes and feelings of both the fiancees.

Lady Gwendolyn was to have two bridesmaids—for form's sake—one, the Honorable Beatrice Ponsonby, a tried and true friend, of whom Colonel Dacre approved cordially; and the other, Mrs. Venable's daughter, a pretty child of six years old. The ceremony was to take place at ten o'clock. After that they were to breakfast quietly in Park Lane, then catch the one-o'clock train for Dover, and cross over to Calais at night.

Colonel Dacre had made arrangements to remain abroad until the spring, and then they would return home, and, after spending about a mouth in town, take up their residence at Borton Hall. This was the program they had drawn up between them, and, unless anything unforeseen should occur to disturb it, it promised exceedingly well.

There was no reason why they should keep away from Borton. Lady Gwendolyn was not ashamed to face her brother or his wife, and Colonel Dacre looked forward to vindicating his darling, and claiming for her the respect and homage that were her due.

If Lady Teignmouth had dared to traduce her—let her beware. He was not bound to spare Reginald, although they had once been friends. His wife's honor would always be far dearer to him than aught else besides.

On Tuesday evening Colonel Dacre dined in Park Lane, and was gratified to find that Mrs. Venable had the tact to leave the drawing-room for them after dessert.

"My husband likes to have me while he is smoking his cigar, as he is away all day," was the apology she made, as she took her departure, and the lovers could not help laughing happily in each other's faces, it seemed so very unnecessary.

Colonel Dacre possessed himself of half Lady Gwendolyn's couch, and did not seem to notice that it was a tight fit for two.

"Well, my darling," he said, as he drew her head down on to his breast; "you don't ask me if everything is ready."

"With a person of your promptitude and energy such a question is superfluous," she returned, smiling up at him from the safe shelter which would be hers by divine right on the morrow.

"I suppose you are dreadfully miserable?" he said softly.

"Dreadfully," she answered, longing to torment him a little, and yet feeling as if she could not. "How do I look?"

"More beautiful than ever," he answered rapturously.

"Surely my eyes are red with crying."

He bent down so anxiously to examine them, that she laughed outright.

"Don't be a goose!" she added sweetly. "I wouldn't marry you if they were."

"You are such a will-o'-the-wisp, Gwen. I sha'n't feel safe until eleven o'clock to-morrow, and so I tell you fairly."

"But you are not obliged to be safe then," she retorted saucily. "Wives do run away from their husbands occasionally."

"If you ever should, as you value your life, go alone," he answered, with sudden fierceness; and then he cooled down as quickly, and said he had not forgotten her old tricks, "there was nothing she loved better than to tease."

"Yes; but what did you mean about my going alone?" she asked, so simply that he felt ashamed to have doubted this innocent child, even for a moment, and hastened to change the subject by speaking of his arrangements for her comfort on the morrow.

"Now, Lawrence," she said at last, "I am not going to be carried about like a piece of rare china, in cotton wool. I am not the least delicate, and I should enjoy roughing it beyond measure, on your arm. Do let us travel sensibly, and mix with people as we go along. I want variety—even adventure—and I mean to dine at the tables d'hote, instead of in solitary state in our own salon."

"Under those circumstances you are likely to have the kind of adventure you will hardly care for," he answered gravely.

"Not under your protection? With that big mustache of yours you look quite terrible, I assure you; and I often think I should be dreadfully afraid of you if I cared for you less."

"And yet 'perfect love casteth out fear,' Gwen."

"Exactly; I am not afraid of you now, excepting so far as is proper and expedient under the circumstances."

He looked a little hurt.

"It can't be proper and expedient in the slightest degree under any circumstances."

"Well, I mean I should be afraid to flirt."

"Surely you would find a better reason than that for refraining."

"Oh, dear, you are so severely literal, Lawrence!"

"'I must speak by the card or equivocation will undo me,' as Shakespeare says somewhere."

And then she pulled down his head, and whispered in his ear so softly:

"You dear old goose! Haven't you found out yet that I love you?"

Colonel Dacre's answer is not worth recording; but it was very expressive and impressive, for Lady Gwendolyn looked very red after it, and was not sorry to hide her confusion on his breast, though, perhaps, she was hardly woman enough yet to understand the mighty absorbing passion she had inspired.

At ten o'clock precisely Colonel Dacre loosened his hold on her and said gently:

"Now, my darling, you must go to bed. To-morrow will be a fatiguing day for you, and I shall want to see a few roses at starting. Oh! Gwen, when I think what to-morrow is to be, it seems to me that I must be dreaming. All my own—my very own, 'to love and to cherish till death us do part.' It is too much happiness! Give me one kiss—the first I have ever had from you, sweetest, to make it all seem real."

"No," she answered shyly, and trembling; "I have always vowed that my husband should have my first kiss."

"Then I am to wait till to-morrow?"

"Yes, Lawrence."

"Heaven bless you, my dear life!" he murmured; then kissed both the hands she extended to him, and hurried off.

It seemed a dreadful parting to him, and yet it was only for twelve hours.

Lady Gwendolyn could hardly realize that she was going to be married when she woke in the morning. But when her new maid appeared, her head just visible under an avalanche of white drapery, she began to think it was probable, and that she had better get up at once, and adorn herself to please her master's eye.

Her master!

Proud as she was, naturally, the term did not humiliate her in connection with Lawrence. Let a woman be ever so haughty, she is ready to be the slave of the man she loves.

Miss Ponsonby arrived in time to arrange the wreath and veil, and was so charmed with the effect that she said, with honest admiration:

"It is a shame of you to have such a quiet wedding, Gwendolyn. I should like all London to see and approve."

"And I am so altered," answered the bride, with a tender blush and smile, "that I don't care for any one's admiration now except Lawrence's."

"You are civil, my dear, certainly," laughed the Honorable Beatrice.

"Oh! I didn't mean you, of course, dear. I am glad of your approval; but, then, I always make sure of that."

"And of somebody else's, too, I fancy."

Lady Gwendolyn put her arms round her friend's neck with the impulsiveness that is always so attractive.

"Beatrice," she said, with tears of happiness trembling on her black lashes, "I love Lawrence with all my heart, and I would rather be his wife than queen of twenty kingdoms!"

Then she glanced at the clock, and, seeing it wanted only a quarter to ten, began to mold on her gloves.

The carriage drove up just as she had finished, and, taking her bouquet from the maid, she went down stairs with the sun shining full on her as went, and yet unable to find a flaw in her beauty or a shadow in her happy eyes.

Colonel Dacre and his best man were standing at the altar as Lady Gwendolyn entered the church on the arm of Lord Denby, Miss Ponsonby's father, and a very old friend of the St. Maur family. A lovely light and color went over her face as she saw him, and met the glance of loving admiration that welcomed her to his side.

Then she forgot to realize herself as she stood by the steady figure, and listened to the words of the marriage service. She began to understand what a terrible chain matrimony must be when people joined hands without joining hearts; and a thrill of thankfulness ran through her, remembering what perfect union subsisted between herself and her husband.

For he was her husband now. The minister had joined their hands, and had lifted his voice to say: "Those whom God has joined let no man put asunder."

The warm, firm pressure of Lawrence's fingers seemed to testify that he was well able to keep what he had won, and the consciousness of his strength soothed and comforted Lady Gwendolyn as nothing else could have done.

TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS

Letter from Mrs. Ayars Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Spring Valley, Sask.—"I took the Vegetable Compound before my last confinement, when I got to feeling so badly that I could not sleep nights, my back ached so across my hips, and I could hardly do my work during the day. I never had such an easy confinement and this is my sixth baby. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the 'Farmer's Telegram' and wrote you for one of your books. We have no druggist in our town, but I saw your medicine in T. Eaton's catalogue. I am a farmer's wife, so have all kinds of work to do inside and outside the house. My baby is a nice healthy girl, who weighed nine pounds at birth. I am feeling fine after putting in a large garden since baby came. (She is as good as she can be.) Yours is the best medicine for women, and I have told about it and even written to my friends about it." — Mrs. ANNIE E. AYARS, Spring Valley, Sask.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is an excellent medicine for expectant mothers, and should be taken during the entire period. It has a general effect to strengthen and tone up the entire system so that it may work in every respect as nature intends. All druggists sell this dependable medicine. Give it a trial. C

She liked his gravity, too, for it showed how thoroughly he felt with her, and realized the deeper and holier meaning of their marriage. There was quite a gathering in the church by the time the ceremony was over; but neither bride nor bridegroom knew much about it. Lady Gwendolyn signed her maiden name for the last time, and then they stepped out into the sunshine together.

Happy, beautiful, and young, the world seemed a lovely place to these two; and they felt as if they had one smile, as well as one heart, between them, as each looked into the other's eyes, and saw reflected there the happiness of his and her heart.

There was not much time to spare when they got back to Park Lane; but Lord Denby made a pretty little speech during the breakfast, which sounded as if it had been inspired by Veuve Clicquot's best champagne, as it was so frothily graceful; then Colonel Dacre looked at the clock and touched his wife's arm.

"I am afraid we shall miss our train, Gwen, if we don't start soon."

She rose directly, and in a very short time returned in a travelling-dress, which was of brown cashmere, trimmed with silk of a darker shade.

Lady Gwendolyn was not one of those brides who like to advertise themselves. To steal quietly through the crowd, unrecognized and unobserved, was all she asked; and she knew her husband's refined tastes would be offended, as well as her own, by any display. But that he approved of the brown cashmere, and the quiet, but elegant, little hat of the same color, was evident from his eyes as he took a survey of her dainty figure ere he handed her into the carriage.

On their way to the station Colonel Dacre held his wife's hand; but he did not attempt any further demonstration, and she was thankful for the self-denial, which gave her time to recover a little from the confusion of her position.

But once in the coupe he had engaged, and on their way to Dover, all his pent-up passion seemed to break forth; and he crushed her against his breast as he murmured:

"Now for my kiss—the one you have kept back for your happy husband, love."

And as she shyly approached her lips to his it seemed to both as if their very souls mingled in that long, glad, passionate embrace.

CHAPTER XIX.

The First Cloud.

"I declare, we have been six months abroad, and not yet come across a single person we know," said Lady Gwendolyn to her husband one morning. "I wonder how it is?"

"Well, we haven't tried to come across people we know, for one thing."

"But it might easily have happened accidentally."

"Don't let us boast," Colonel Dacre returned, as he passed his hand through her arm. "A thing always happens directly you begin to congratulate yourself upon having escaped it."

"Then I won't say another word."

"Come for a walk instead," he said. "You have spoiled me so, Gwen, that I can't enjoy my cigar unless you are hanging about me."

"Oh! Lawrence, I am sure I never hang about you."

"What do you do, then?"

"I walk by your side."

"Like a discreet British maiden. Do you know you have got your part very perfect, considering the short time you have had to learn it?"

"I don't call six months a short time."

"It has seemed so to me—perhaps, because I have been so happy. I am afraid you have been dreadfully bored, Gwen, as it has passed so slowly."

"Don't be ridiculous, Lawrence!"

"But, my dear love, you forced me reluctantly to draw that inference."

Lady Gwendolyn pouted, and Colonel Dacre, being still his wife's lover, as men of his constant nature continue to be all their lives, stooped his [illegible] head and kissed the sweet, red mouth.

"Now, put on your hat," he said, "and we will go for a little stroll. I am quite beginning to like this free-and-easy sort of life, Gwen. Are not you?"

"I don't seem to mind much where we are so that we are together. I have given up the world and its vanities——"

"All for love?"

"All for love," she repeated. "I couldn't have a better reason, surely."

"I am quite satisfied with it, if that is what you mean. But be quick and dress, or the beauty of the day will be over; and, mind you, wrap up well."

She came back presently in velvet and furs, with a pretty, frosty bloom on her round cheeks; and as Colonel Dacre offered her his arm, he said proudly to himself that there wasn't a woman in France who could come up to his darling. And his darling was quite aware that she was looking her best, and thoroughly enjoyed the respectful admiration she excited, not for its own sake, but because she liked Lawrence to feel that she was appreciated.

They walked up the centre avenue of the Tuileries, and then made their way down the Rue Royale to the boulevards, which looked very gay this bright morning.

Then, walking briskly back again, they paid a visit to the pastry-cook at the corner of the Rue Castiglione, and lunched off oyster patties and babas, finishing up with the tiniest glass of curacoa, as a suitable defense against the cold.

Lady Gwendolyn was arranging her veil after this moderate but dainty refection, when a very magnificent dame rustled into the shop, and said, in abominable French, which, however, she seemed delighted to air:

"Donnez moi oon patty, mademoiselle, et depeche parceque je suis en hate."

This pastry-cook being much affected by the English, mademoiselle was accustomed to this sort of thing, and did not even smile as she handed madame her pate out of the hot safe in the centre of the shop, and placed a chair for her beside one of the little marble tables.

Lady Gwendolyn glanced furtively at the face belonging to this voice, and then made her way toward the door, keeping as far as possible from the neighborhood of the newcomer, so as not to attract her attention.

But Colonel Dacre, who had noticed nothing, turned round from examining some bonbons in the window, and, seeing her close to the door, called out:

"Wait a moment, Gwen, I haven't paid."

The lady at the marble table looked up then, and by simply catching Colonel Dacre's eye, explained Lady Gwendolyn's little ruse.

"What, you, Norah?" he said, with evident pleasure, as he extended his hand; "What brought you to Paris?"

"Well, money; but I forget how much," she answered, with her old vivacity, although he thought her much thinner and paler than when they met last. "I am getting so tired of England, of everybody, and everything. Is that your wife who has just left the shop so precipitately?" she concluded, with some abruptness.

"She has just gone out, certainly."

"To avoid me? You need not deny it, Lawrence, it is very natural she should. However, I have something she ought, in justice, to see. Will you tell me where you are staying?"

"At the Hotel d'Albion, close by. If you will tell me where you are, Norah, I will call upon you, to-morrow, and take charge of anything you may have for her."

"Thank you, that will be best," she answered. "Don't let me keep you from Lady Gwendolyn. I am at the Grand Hotel, number forty-three; but don't come before noon. I sleep so wretchedly nowadays, that I am glad to rest in the morning. If Lady Gwendolyn minds your coming, write me a line instead, and I shall understand. I think if I had a husband I cared for I should be awfully jealous."

"Not if he gave you no cause, I hope."

"Perhaps. But do go. I wouldn't for the world add to my offenses in your wife's eyes by exposing her to annoyance. She is much too handsome to be a minute alone in the streets of Paris."

"True," he said, and hurried off.

Lady Gwendolyn was standing at a book-shop waiting for him, and put her arm into his without a word. Neither did he make any remark. He thought it best not to speak of Mrs. O'Hara, until he had heard what she had to say on the morrow. Lady Gwendolyn was unusually grave and quiet for the rest of the day, and if he happened to raise his eyes suddenly he caught a very wistful look of the dark eyes; but he bided his time, and still said nothing.

That night when Lady Gwendolyn fancied that her husband was asleep she cried softly to herself, for the string of old, sad memories in her heart had been too much for her, and she wondered fearfully if this woman had come to take her husband from her as she had taken Percy Gray from poor Lady Maria.

"She is tired, poor child!" he said to himself; and, leaving word with her maid that she was not to rise a moment earlier than she felt inclined, on his account, as he was going for a walk, he amused himself with a morning visit to the Palais Royale.

Returning about ten o'clock, he was met at the door of the salon by Phoebe, who said that her mistress begged him to excuse her, as she had a tiresome headache, and would lie down for another hour. This was the first time Colonel Dacre had been called upon to breakfast without the fair fresh face of his spouse near him at table, and an expression of disappointment came into his gray eyes.

Nevertheless, he said with admirable self-abnegation:

"Tell your mistress not to get up on any account, if she feels better in bed. But I suppose I shall be able to see her before I go out?"

"My lady desired particularly that she might not be disturbed, sir. She said she thought she should be well enough to take a drive in the afternoon if she kept quiet for the next few hours."

"Oh, very well!" answered Colonel Dacre. And he might have been unreasonable; but somehow he felt snubbed. "What has her ladyship taken, Phoebe?"

"A strong cup of tea, sir; that was all she would have."

And the girl, who was already attached to her young mistress, looked quite distressed. Colonel Dacre was obliged to assume a tranquility he did not feel to reassure her.

"Rest is sure to do her more good than anything, Phoebe. Be sure and tell her ladyship when she rings for you that I was obliged to go out this morning; but shall hope to se her at luncheon time."

Phoebe bowed, and left the room. Then Colonel Dacre swallowed a cup of coffee, ate part of a roll, and then, telling the waiter to get him a cab, prepared for his visit to Mrs. O'Hara.

He found his old friend reclining on a sofa in an exquisite peignoir of pale blue cashmere, trimmed with lace, while a coquettish little cap rested on the top of her brown hair. She held out to him her jeweled hand languidly.

"I am so glad to see you, Lawrence. How is your wife?"

"She is rather tired this morning."

"I hope that is all."

"I hope so, too. She is not delicate, naturally, neither is she very strong, and we have been walking more than she is accustomed to do since we came to Paris."

"How long have you been here?"

"Rather more than a week?"

"You are on your way to England, I suppose?"

"I believe so; but we have scarcely decided yet."

"I presume you would hurry home if anything happened to your uncle, Sir Lawrence?"

"Naturally. But we heard from him just before we left Biarritz, and he then said that he was remarkably well, so that I do no anticipate a sudden recall."

Mrs. O'Hara had a letter in her hand; but she put it down on the table, and lifted those wonderful Irish eyes of hers to his face.

"Lawrence," she said quietly, "will you answer me one question?"

"Nay, a dozen, if I can, Norah."

"One will be enough. Has the accusation I made against Lady Gwendolyn that day at the 'Langham' ever troubled you in the slightest degree?"

He reflected before he answered:

"I don't think it has. I have such full faith in my wife, you see."

"Still, you know me well enough to understand that I should not make a statement of this sort unless I believed it to be true."

"No; but we are all liable to error, Norah?"

"And you may as well add that a person of my impulsive temper is doubly liable. I certainly did think that Lady Gwendolyn had been the cause of my poor brother's death, and had destroyed him by her cruel coquetries; and, as I am not in the habit of bridling my tongue; or disguising my feelings, I told her plainly what I thought. But since then I have discovered my mistake."

"Go on," he said eagerly.

She pointed to the letter on the table.

"Read that," she said, "and it will save my breath. You will see by the signature that it was written by my poor brother himself, and is dated the second of August."

"The day before his death?"

"Exactly. It is in pencil, as you will perceive, but is quite legible, and has the 'Dragon, Turoy, Westmoreland,' printed in colors on the paper."

"Yes, I see. The landlord of the 'Dragon,' who is quite the gentleman in his way, must have lent it to him. I remember that he affected all those little refinements."

"Very well, now, read it through, and tell me what you make of it."

"Would you mind telling me, first of all, to whom this letter was written?"

"To a Miss Pindar—a relation of my mother's, who brought us up when our parents died. Poor George, with all his faults, was very much attached to her, and always kept her au courant as to his movements. She was his favorite of us two, and I know she scraped and saved in order to send him money for his pleasures. But he did mean to make it all up to her," added Mrs. O'Hara. "I saw the letter he wrote to Miss Pindar directly he came into his property."

It occurred to Colonel Dacre that promises did not cost much, but he refrained from any hint to this effect, seeing how much it comforted Norah to accredit her brother with good intentions.

CHAPTER XX.

Loved and Lost.

"Will you read the letter aloud?" added Mrs. O'Hara, as he was turning it over, and he began at once:

"My Dear Aunt——" [He always called her "aunt," put in Norah, parenthetically.] "A more miserable man than I does not exist. Lady Teignmouth has thrown me over, as you warned me that she would when it suited her purpose; you know how desperately I loved her; you also know how she has kept me dangling at her skirts all these years, luring me on to destruction with her sweet, false eyes. Life is nothing to me without her, and, though she has sworn so often that she loved me, she laughed me to scorn when I suggested that she and I might be happy together in another country. You will say all this is very wrong, aunt. Pauline is another man's wife; but my only excuse is that the first time we met I believed her to be free, and she did not undeceive me, although she must have seen that I was badly smitten, and ready to make a dolt of myself at her bidding. Now it has gone so far that I could not draw back if I would, and I would not if I could. You will scarcely understand such mad infatuation, but I am not the only man who has preferred to put an end to his existence rather than live without the woman he loved. I am to meet Pauline to-night, and with a few words from her lips my fate will be decided. When this reaches you I may be beyond the reach of everything but your prayers, but I know that even if the whole world condemn me, you will always—always have a kind word, and a kind thought, for the boy you reared, although he died a guilty, despairing man. George Belmont.

"Turoy, 2nd August, 1—9."

"You see that the poor, unhappy fellow took his own life in his despair," said Norah, wiping her eyes furtively. "He always spoke to me very admiringly of Lady Teignmouth, but I had no idea that he cared for her like that, or I would have saved him, somehow."

"Do you intend to make any use of this letter?" inquired Colonel Dacre quietly.

"No; I have had enough of revenge for the present. If Lady Teignmouth were to come in my way, I should probably tax her with her deceit and perfidy, because, you know, I never can keep things in; but we are not likely to meet, and meanwhile you may have the letter if you will promise to take care of it that I may have it for reference later, if required."

This Colonel Dacre readily guaranteed, and then he turned to Mrs. O'Hara, and said:

"And now about yourself, Norah? What are you doing here?"

"Nothing in particular."

"I heard you were going to be married to a Russian prince."

"She colored furiously.

"Who told you that?"

"Some fellow we met at Nice, but I can't for the life of me remember his name. I wouldn't believe it, but Gwen said it was just the sort of thing you would do."

"Why?" she inquired sharply, keeping her face averted as she spoke.

"Well, she thought you would not care for a quiet, humdrum life in England."

Card Makers' Guild.

The annual banquet of the company of Makers of Playing Cards, which is held in England, is an elaborate affair and invitations are eagerly sought after. In accordance with a time-honored custom, each guest is presented with a pack of cards of original design. The die is destroyed after the edition is printed, and consequently the packs are keenly sought after by collectors. Complete sets command a high price, and only on rare occasions find their way into the market. The company, by the way, had a wonderfully comprehensive collection of cards of all periods recently on exhibition at the Guildhall.

Awful!

A Jew, whose son was very ill, on returning home one evening inquired of his wife: "How's poor Moses, Rachel?"

"Very bad indeed, Isaac. He won't take any interest——"

"What?" broke in her husband; "won't take any interest? He must be dead!"

"I Dreamt That I Dwelt in Marble Halls"

(1) The Chateau Lake Louise. (2) The Patio and Big Telescope. (3) A section of the Dining-room. (4) The Lounge leading to the Dining-room.

This new nine-storey hotel, occupying the ground space of an entire city block, was taken over from the contractors two weeks before its opening on June 1, by the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is the new Chateau Lake Louise, built last winter at a cost of two million dollars on the banks of the famous Lake Louise, 6,500 feet up in the Canadian Rockies.

To equip this new hotel and stock it with food for guest occupancy on June 1, 800 beds, 390 bureau, 780 chairs, 390 pieces of upholstery, 390 desks for rooms, with sheets and pillow cases, box bed springs and other equipment to match, had to be transported three and a half miles up a narrow-gauge mountain railway. The perishable food, which had to be stocked in the hotel the day before opening, included 11,000 pounds of turkey, 8,000 pounds of roasting fowl, 18 whole lamb, 12 whole hogs, 1,000 pounds of new cabbage, 40 cases of grape fruit, and 20 cases of fresh spinach. Approximately 7,000 eggs had to be rushed from the Canadian Pacific supply farms at Strathmore, Alberta, and placed in refrigerators.

Of the other foodstuffs, five tons of potatoes, 300 sacks of flour, 20 tons of sugar, 3,000 pounds of butter, one ton of tea and a thousand pounds of fresh coffee had to be placed in the larders.

All told, a special train of eight cars, carrying 350 tons of foodstuffs, was required to open this remarkable edifice. And all of this had to be rushed in at the last moment, for at the opening banquet the new dining rooms were almost full.

A staff of 425 men and women, including three managers, had to be on hand a week before its opening. These employees have a building to themselves equipped with rooms with bath, hot and cold running water, a rotunda and a ballroom.

The new Chateau Lake Louise has 400 rooms with bath, all outside rooms, 210 of them with southern exposure facing the famous lake. There are telegraph and cable offices in the rotunda, and each bed-room contains a phone which can be connected with long distance.

A resident doctor and trained nurse will have offices in the building to look after the health of its guests; and a special dining room has been built for the maids, nurses and younger children of the guests.

Chateau Lake Louise is now said to be the largest and most modern equipped chateau in the world.

COWS FOR THE SETTLER

THE ONTARIO GOVERNMENT IS HELPING NORTHERN FARMERS

The Northland Produces Much Hay —It Is Best Sold on the Hoof or In Milk — Settlers May Purchase Cattle Cheaply—Wireworm Poison.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Few people in Old Ontario who have not travelled through the northern part of the province realize that there is a territory lying north of New Liskeard and west of Cochrane that will in the near future become one of the most important producing agricultural areas of the province. The country adjacent to the railways is now cleared or being cleared to such an extent that the settlers are no longer dependent upon their timber or pulp wood for revenue, but are now engaged in farming proper. Many farms, especially in the New Liskeard section, are entirely cleared of bush and the while acreage is either under cultivation or in hay and pasture.

Northland Produces Much Hay.

With the wonderful producing power of this new land there is an exceptionally rapid growth of vegetation and hay is now being produced in such quantities that it is with difficulty that a market can be found for the entire production. So much is this so that even this year in June, stacks of 1924 hay may be seen as one travels along the railway. Settlers have not been producing hay alone, but have been getting into live stock raising as rapidly as circumstances and conditions would permit. This is evidenced by the fact that between New Liskeard and Cochrane there are creameries at the following points: New Liskeard, Ramore, Earlton, Matheson, Val Gagne and Cochrane.

Ready Money Scarce With Settlers.

As was the case with settlers in Old Ontario so it is in most cases with settlers in Northern Ontario—they have very little ready cash as their earnings have been used in clearing the land consequently the Ontario Government is assisting the settlers financially in the building of creameries and in the purchase of cows. Such assistance is being given on business principles only, that is, the money for the building of creameries and the purchase of cows is being loaned to the settlers at a moderate rate of interest and under certain conditions.

Purchase of Cows.

Briefly speaking, the new policy of the Department of Lands and Forests, through the Northern Development Branch, in co-operation with the Department of Agriculture through the Live Stock Branch, is as follows:—

Cattle are to be purchased in carload lots only.

Settlers are to appoint a Representative to select the animals, and are to authorize him to act on their behalf in such selection and in deciding as to price.

Settlers are required to sign an application form to this effect agreeing to give promissory notes and liens against their farms for unpaid balances.

Government will appoint a representative of the Department of Agriculture to accompany settlers' representative and assist him in selection of cattle.

Government will advance full amount of money to pay for cattle at time of purchase and to prepay transportation charges and to pay expenses of settlers' representative.

Settlers will be charged $12 per cow to defray the transportation charges and the cost of their own representative. This flat rate will mean a saving of several dollars per cow to the settlers, and will give them the advantage of knowing exactly what these costs will amount to.

The total cost to the settler will be the amount paid for the stock purchased for him plus $12 per head for those other charges.

Upon delivery the settlers will be required to pay at least 25 per cent. of this total cost and as much more as he is able.

Interest at 5 per cent. will be charged on unpaid balances and repayments are required at the rate of $3 per cow per month, and the settler shall give a promissory note to this effect and a lien against his farm.

Repayments may be made to the creamery or to such other local office as may be designated in the community.—L. E. O'Neill, Live Stock Branch, Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Cut-Worm Poison.

Bran, 25 lbs.
Paris Green or White Arsenic, 1 lb.
Molasses, ½ gal.
Water, 2 gals.

Mix the bran and poison together dry in a large vessel. Add the molasses to water. Stir well and then pour the liquid over the poison bran and mix until every part is moist and will fall through the fingers. Apply half a teaspoonful near each plant at dusk and see that chickens keep away.—Dept. of Extension, O. A. College, Guelph.

Sweet Clover Hay.

A recent press bulletin from the Federal Department of Agriculture states that where any other suitable crop can be grown it is best not to use sweet clover for hay. As it is a hollow stemmed, coarse growing plant, it is rather hard to cure sweet clover properly. It must be cut at the right moment, which is usually during the rainy period of early summer. As a silage or pasture crop, however, sweet clover is one of our most valuable plants, while few legumes exceed it as a soil builder.

The First Banks.

Few things play a more important part in our lives to-day than the system of banking.

The word bank originally meant a tradesman's stall, and the first bank in anything like the modern sense existed about 2,700 years ago. We learn about this bank from clay tablets discovered near Babylon. Apparently the first firm of bankers was that of Egibi & Son, who flourished in Babylon about 600 or 700 B.C.

The early Chinese were in the habit of issuing paper money—indeed, they got into difficulties by issuing too much. There was a bank in China about A.D. 1,000.

But banking as we understand it to-day did not begin until the twelfth century, when the Bank of Venice was established. This was followed by the Bank of Barcelona, in Spain, and the Bank of Stockholm, in Sweden. The latter was the first bank in Europe to issue paper money. This was in 1668. Other early banks were the Bank of St. George, at Genoa, the Bank of Hamburg, and the Bank of Amsterdam.

Eat Together—You're Married.

The natives of Rangoon, India, carry along their courtship in pretty well Occidental style. It is in contrast to the Chinese negotiation by parents with the bridegroom often "sight unseen" by the youthful wife. A young man with friends of his own age calls on a glossy-haired, olive-skinned, laughing Burmese maid, and generally she is surrounded by a merry group of her own age. If he can persuade her to eat a meal with him he has won her, and legally, if somewhat loosely, they are married. Greater formality is generally observed, and witnesses assured when the parents of either have considerable property.

Punishment.

The whole of life and experience goes to show, that right or wrong doing, whether as to the physical or the spiritual nature, is sure in the end to meet its appropriate reward or punishment. Penalties may be delayed, but they are sure to come.

A KNIGHT IN BIRDLAND.

Male Bullfinch Is One of the Best of Husbands.

There is not much sympathy to be found in wild nature. If a bird meets with a mishap it is usually left to get over it without any assistance from its companions, writes Oliver G. Pike, F.Z.S., F.R.P.S.

When a bird is taken ill and expects to die you will not find its mate standing by to console with it, but the suffering creature will just slink away to a place of hiding in which to meet the end, while the bird which is left will very soon find a new companion.

But I have come across a few instances where sympathy was shown. When birds are mated after a short courtship the male is most attentive to his newly-won wife, and will almost starve himself to offer tit-bits to her.

The beautiful male bullfinch is one of the best of husbands. A pair of these birds attempted to nest in my garden last spring. The first nest came to an untimely end and a second was built. When this contained young almost ready to fly, I heard the two parents calling out in great distress. I hurriedly climbed up the steep bank leading to the nest in a thick hedge, but I was just too late, for a stoat dashed from the nest and disappeared in the thick undergrowth. Three of the young had been eaten, while the fourth was dead outside the nest.

For days afterwards the hen bullfinch sat on twigs in the garden looking most disconsolate, and it was rather beautiful to see the male offer her choice morsels, which he continually searched for. It seemed as if he was doing his best to cheer her, and it gave me much pleasure when I found out that he had succeeded. For at the end of a week they began a third nest, and with this they were successful in rearing a family.

It is only natural, however, for a bird to assist its mate during the time of courtship. It is in the winter months, when each bird has to fight its own battle in the grim search for food, that sympathy is rare. I have known only one instance of this.

In my garden there was a large dog kennel with a flat roof. During the winter months the table-like top was utilized as a larder for the birds. Many kinds visited us, and it was seldom that the table was unoccupied. One morning a new visitor appeared, and she was a cripple. This great tit had one leg missing, and she had some trouble in balancing her body as she picked up the food.

The sparrows, for some reason, objected to the presence of this injured bird, and drove her off. She made many attempts to obtain a meal, but the others prevented her.

The next morning she brought with her another great tit, and again the sparrows tried to drive her away. In a flash the second great tit set about them, fought the whole flock, and kept the board clear while the crippled bird obtained a good meal. On each succeeding visit this birdland knight accompanied her, and such respect did the sparrows have for his fighting powers that she afterwards secured her food in peace.

Wyoming Freak of Nature.

The Devil's Tower, in the Black Hills of Wyoming is a curious freak of nature. It is located about 35 miles from Sundance and 85 miles from Deadwood. It rises from the plains in the distance, looking like a gigantic monument. The summit of the Devil's Tower rises to a height of more than 1,200 feet from the plain. It is three and a half miles around the base, and the tower part itself shoots up a sheer 800 feet. The tower has been climbed but once, and that was about twenty years ago. The man who made the ascent spent two months in constructing a ladder up the side, before it reached the top. To prevent any one else attempting to duplicate his feat, the bottom part of the ladder has been torn away. The balance of the ladder still remains in plain sight on the side of the tower.

NEWSTEAD ABBEY.

Ancestral Home of the Byrons for Two Hundred and Seventy Years.

Lord Byron died on April 19, 1824, at the early age of 36.

The centuries link us on to Newstead Priory and Abbey, the ancestral home of the Byrons for two hundred and seventy years.

This beautiful monastic pile was founded by King Henry I., of England, as an act of expiation for the murder of Archbishop Thomas a Becket. Situate ten miles from Nottingham, on the borders of Robin Hood's Sherwood Forest, it could not have been more romantically placed. The brotherhood belong to the Order of Augustinian canons—Black Friars.

In 1540, after the Dissolution, Newstead was given to "Sir John Byron the Little with the Great Beard," and in 1808 the half-ruinous old place became the poet's headquarters.

Cloisters, cells, dormitories, library, and other parts of the great monastic structure are now in good condition, also the Priory Church. A Gothic fountain and the grave of "Boatswain," the poet's favorite Newfoundland dog, are personal things, the urn-crowned grave being on the side of the monks' High Altar.

Byron occupied the Prior's Parlor, fitting up a bedroom and a dressing-room, and these are unchanged. Here stands his four-poster bedstead, surmounted with the baron's coronet, and the original Chinese chintz curtains. Byronic jugs and basins may be found, too, with pictures of Gentleman Jackson, Joe Murray, and other pets; also views of Harrow and Cambridge.

What was once the Chapter House is now an orangery, and above range the state rooms, occupied, in turn, by, and hence named after, Edward III., Henry VII., Charles II.

This estate is held by right of the sovereign, who, at any time he chooses, may spend a night here. The guests' refectory became the drawing-room and looks out upon the great oak which Byron planted in 1806. Nearby is planted the "cup formed from a skull," of which he wrote.

Perhaps the most striking feature of the ruins is the west front of the abbey church, resembling as it does the great end of Holyrood Chapel. High over the main door above, is a figure of the Saviour, and over lancet windows of much delicacy, is a statuette of the Crown Virgin and Holy Child. It proved to be too much for the cannon balls of Cromwell, but some believe that it was spared miraculously, and Byron himself even half believed it, as he confessed.

King "Pricks In" the Sheriffs.

On the twelfth day of November, each year King George conducts the annual observance quaintly termed "Pricking in the Sheriffs." This custom is another picturesque survival of the days when only a few learned men could write, and marks and signs instead of a person's signature were affixed to important documents. At the ceremony the King receives from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who is attired in his State robes of black and gold, a golden bodkin. With this he pricks holes opposite the names of the men chosen to act as county sheriffs for the ensuing year. The list of names is submitted on a parchment roll, and in order to preserve the tradition that the King chooses the sheriffs, three names are submitted from each county for his consideration. Legally the King could "prick" any name he wished, but invariably he accepts the nomination of his Chancellor's Court. In Norman times the office of sheriff was one of great responsibility. Nowadays, however, a county sheriff's duties consist in acting as returning officer at Parliamentary elections and attending a judge during County Assizes. A sheriff continues in office for one year only, and cannot be compelled to serve a second time. The office is not only gratuitous, but compulsory, for if the person appointed refuses he is liable to be fined.

In False Colors

By CECILLE LANGDON

Earle Danvers was disappointed, wrathful and indignant all at the same time. He felt that he had reason to be. He was disappointed in his hope of winning the love of Vera Martin, indignant at her sudden and inexplicable change in her treatment of him, angry and resentful toward Drake Beale, who to all seeming had stepped between him and his heart's choice and had practically supplanted him.

It had come about in a single day. Earle was all but engaged to Vera. Her sister, Blanche, had paired off with the flashy, intrusive young fellow who was a newcomer in Lisle, Drake Beale. To this avowed lover of her sister Vera had been barely civil. All of a sudden she avoided Earle and Beale became her constant escort. Blanche, thus rudely deserted by her treacherous chevalier, sulked and would not even speak to Vera. Everything and everybody seemed at odds. Misery, suspicion, antagonism reigned where harmony had previously existed.

"Vera is not the girl I took her to be if she can endure that Beale," soliloquized Earle. "I am going to have a plain understanding with her, once for all."

Earle watched his opportunity to meet Vera alone. He succeeded the following day, making it manifest that he was not satisfied with her passing on, as she palpably desired to do with a mere bow. He confronted her with a grave, set face.

"May I speak a few words that are on my mind?" he intimated courteously, but with an insistency she could not resist. She did not reply. Her face flushed deeply. Then it lost its color and she stood with downcast eyes and averted face.

"Vera," spoke Earle, "I fancied a week ago that you and I understood one another. We were, at least, good friends, and, I hoped, something more. I seem no longer welcome. The attentions of Mr. Beale are a matter of comment. Do you prefer his company to mine? Is it your wish that I discontinue my visits to your home?"

She put out her hand impulsively. Then she withdrew it. She murmured brokenly: "Can you not trust me?" burst into tears, and fled from the spot convulsed with emotion. In a kind of a stupor Earle watched her disappear.

"Are you lost in dreamland, Mr. Danvers?" a bitter, bantering voice broke in upon his abstractedness, and Earle turned to face Blanche. She had always been to him a frivolous, light-headed coquette, but he read in her face jealousy and resentment now.

"You must know that I am deeply hurt at the change in your sister's attitude toward me," said Earle frankly. "I am greatly perplexed to know the reason why."

"You needn't be," replied Blanche, "when you realize that she has stepped between myself and Mr. Beale. Think of it! Oh, the conscienceless flirt! A treacherous sister and a false friend. I am glad you have found her out. It is a shame! Mr. Beale really loved me, and although my brother, Arnold, disliked him and opposed his visits here, Mr. Beale would have been true and faithful if Vera had not exercised her wiles to captivate him. The minx —if she is my sister!

"And all that Arnold had against Mr. Beale was that he was a stranger and we knew little or nothing about him. Oh, it is mean, cruel, wicked!"—and away flashed Blanche, weeping and wretched as Vera had been.

It pained Earle to have Vera pass him with a coterie of girl friends the next day and never lift her eyes to him. It tortured him worse to see Vera whirling by in an automobile with Beale.

It was a week later when Earle received a telegram that startled and mystified him. It was from Arnold, who had been absent from home in a neighboring city for a week, and it read: "As a lasting favor go to Willsville and get a description, a photograph, if possible, of a man called Edward Pike, who was arrested there for swindling last year."

Arnold was too close a friend to deny a favor. Earle followed up the request. He made a discovery that set him thinking along new lines. He joined Arnold in the city the next day.

"Why," remarked Earle at the outset, "this Edward Pike you asked me to look up is no other than Drake Beale. I have his photograph."

"Good!" applauded Arnold. "That clinches the evidence. Old friend, I suppose you have been made to suffer through Vera's apparent desertion of you, but it was done for a purpose. We found out that Beale planned an elopement with Blanche. She is foolish, senseless in some things. To outwit the scoundrel and gain time, Vera tried her arts on the fickle knave. Now I have evidence as to his being not only a married man, but an all-around criminal. Even Blanche will shrink from him when the expose is made, which must be at once."

It took just one hour for Arnold Martin to convince Beale that he had better remove to pastures new. Flighty, impressionable Blanche soon forgot him amid raptures over a new fiance. And Earle—he never forgot the true, trustful expression in Vera's eyes when he asked her pardon for having ever doubted her fidelity and love.

Something to Think About.

"I reckons," said Uncle Eben, "dat a candidate has to be right keerful not to let de handshakin' sociability git to be so much of a habit dat it interferes wif his office work when he gits de job."

HARM IN TOO MUCH SLEEP.

Diminishes the Nervous Energy and Degenerates the Small Arteries.

That too much sleep diminishes the nervous energy and degenerates the small arteries is the opinion of Vaughan Dryden, who writes as follows in a London paper:

Persistent opponents of summer time are never tired of asserting that it "deprives people of their natural sleep." That is all very well; but nobody yet has defined when we ought to sleep and how many hours. Many people sleep far too much; and it is a well-known scientific fact that excessive sleep diminishes the nervous energy and degenerates the small arteries and capillaries of the brain.

Sleepiness is generally a sign of mental lethargy; neither Sancho Panza not the Fat Boy in "Pickwick," outstanding examples of doughty sleepers, were noticeably brilliant. Sir John Sinclair roundly declares that too much sleep "blunts and destroys the senses, and renders both the body and mind unfit for action." Sir Herman Weber, the author of "Longevity and the Prolongation of Life," blames the habit of sleeping more than eight hours for the premature decay of mental faculties.

Many men of active brain are satisfied with little sleep. John Wesley was up at four o'clock every morning. Immanuel Kant slept very little, remarking that much sleep exhausts the energy and shortens life. The latter conclusion is borne out by the fact that many long-lived people spent but a short space of their time in bed.

Sir Julius Benedict slept only four hours a night, and lived to be 81. Sir Henry Thompson, who lived to be 80 years old, was a busy physician who saw patients all day and attended social gatherings every night. Yet he found the time to write several large books on medical subjects, and he did this by being in his study at six every morning.

Eminent barristers like Lord Reading and Lord Birkenhead were entertaining or being entertained socially every night. Yet they would rise at four or five in the morning and do several hours' work on their briefs before going into court at ten.

Some Misnamed Animals.

Why do we call the bat blind? Put one of these creatures in the darkest place possible and it will flit about without any trouble whatever. It is well known that a bat can see and catch the tiniest insects at night—insects that the human eye would never detect.

We make lots of mistakes about animals. We call pigs lazy, greedy and stupid. Yet, regarding the laziness, pigs are trained in some countries to do very heavy work.

Indeed, farmers who breed pigs will tell you these animals have an extraordinary amount of intelligence. Because they look greedy, we think they are greedy. But many animals not one-tenth their size consume much more food.

Why the bear should have been dubbed surly is hard to say. Explorers tell us that bears, with perhaps the exception of the white bear of the North, are really good-tempered, docile beasts. They are playful and friendly, and can be tamed very soon if treated kindly.

It may not be a mistake to say that the lion is brave, but he is no more entitled to the adjective than some other animals—rams, foxes and wild pigs, to mention but three. Rams are braveness itself during the breeding season, and it is even dangerous to go near them. The wild pig knows no fear, will attack a man without hesitation, and will not leave a drinking pool because a tiger happens to be there.

The weasel has a reputation for being sharp. "You'll never catch a weasel asleep," folks say. But you can, save at night. The weasel is a lazy little beast all day, lying in a state of partial stupor. Only at night is he really wideawake and alert.

Wanted It Direct.

A negro went to a clergyman and handed him a letter to the Lord asking Him to "Please sen' dis poor dawky $25 right away."

The clergyman, a kind-hearted man, felt sorry for the negro, and, calling together several of his friends, he said: "This poor fellow has so much faith in the Lord that he expects Him to send him $25 right away. We shouldn't let him be disappointed. Let's make a collection for him."

The next day the negro received a letter containing $15. He went immediately to the clergyman and wrote another letter, which ran like this:—

"Deah Lord,—De next time you sen' dis darky money, don't sen' it through no parson—sen' it to me direct."

"Stately Home" In Peril.

The historic mansion of Cassiobury, near Watford, England, where venerable monks once worshipped the memory of the martyred St. Alban, and where Elizabethan beauties walked and talked with the Earl of Essex, is in grave peril of the scrap-heap.

Cassiobury, with its hundreds of acres of grounds, was sold by private treaty in 1922. Roads are already being constructed through the estate.

The mansion and estate were the property, before the sale, of the Earl of Essex. His predecessors had held them since early in the seventeenth century. Baron Capell, the father of the first Earl of Essex, was beheaded in 1649 for his loyalty to the Royalist cause. The first earl was accused of plotting, and was committed to the Tower, where he was found with his throat cut.

The estate, under the name, "Caisson," figures in the Domesday Book. The house was then an abbey, constructed in 791 by the monks of Verulam, the Roman name for St. Alban, in honor of St. Alban.

Now a Contented Man.

Jinks was always complaining of his wife's memory. "She can never remember anything," said he. "It's awful!"

"My wife was just as bad," said Brown, "till I found a capital recipe."

"What was it?" asked Jinks, eagerly.

"Why," said Brown, "whenever there's anything particular I want the missus to remember, I write it on a slip of paper and gum it on the looking-glass."

Jinks is now a contented man.

Her Destiny

By BRUCE WORTHINGTON

It was a cheap dismal restaurant, but its fare the best Aline Durand could afford. A girl somewhat older than herself had entered and taken the opposite chair. Aline fell to covertly studying the newcomer. Her face was almost tragic, her eyes tired looking, her garments were poor, though carefully patched. In fact her whole presentment was one of destitution.

Aline watched the girl as she read a sign: "No meal under fifteen cents" and inspected her shabby purse. It contained two nickels and three pennies. The lips compressed a trifle harder. The girl arose. Impetuously Aline caught her arm.

"You have left your money at home," she intimated softly. "Won't you accept a small loan from me?"

The other stared at her in wonder. She uttered a harsh, bitter laugh. "You may not know it," she said, "but you are offering me charity."

"Even so," went on Aline winningly, "I am pretty near the same condition. Suppose we pool our respective miseries and exchange confidences. And meantime, please order a good meal."

The stranger warmed up to slight cheer under the influence of Aline's hopeful, friendly overtures. She was Viola Reese, she told Aline, a stenographer, an orphan. She recounted her loss of steady work. She had been unsuccessful in finding a new position. She had wandered the streets all the night before and had slept on a park bench until noon.

"You are to come home with me and share my room," insisted Aline. "You will take the rest you need for a day or two. Then how happy we will be when we are both at work again!"

"I never expect to be happy again," declared Viola Reese. "The cruel blows of fate have numbed me—crushed me. And I have no right to share your little store—you, so generous, so kind." And the speaker broke down utterly.

Aline handed her new friend two dollars the next morning after a room-cooked breakfast and she started away from the house.

"You may need some little trifles like handkerchiefs, or a collar, or laces," she suggested. "Oh, don't look so grim. You can pay me back when we get work. I expect word from some of my answers to advertisements, but I shan't cease to apply for work outside of that."

Viola went to the door as the landlady brought a letter. It was directed to Aline. Through neglect or rough usage the flap had come open. Viola noticed the name of a leading local cloak factory on the envelope. She hesitated for a moment. Then she withdrew the enclosure as she suspected it was an answer to Aline's reply to an advertisement. "If Miss Durand will call upon us, we can put her at work at sixteen dollars a week," it read.

"I need the place worse than she," whispered Viola fiercely. "Oh, it is shameful, treacherous, but I must not let this chance go by."

Viola Reese was awarded the place she went after, as Aline Durand. Two weeks later a terrible fire consumed the factory and over a dozen employees perished in the flames. Aline often tried vainly to think out the cause of the abrupt departure of her guest. Often she sighed for companionship, for she was very lonely, and there was a passage in her young life that had nearly broken her heart. In a neighboring city she had become engaged to Walter Marsh, an estimable young man. One day his wealthy uncle had sought her out. He represented that he could enrich or beggar his nephew, as he chose. He pictured to Aline how the dream of his life for years had been to have Walter wed Marcia Danforth, the daughter of an old friend. He told Aline she was spoiling the future of the man she professed to love.

Aline was impressed. She sent a note to Walter, telling him that he must forget and went herself in a new city.

He had sought for her everywhere, without success. One day in an old newspaper he came across the name of Aline Durand in the list of those destroyed in the cloak factory fire. Life was thence forth barren to him. He amazed and delighted his uncle a month later by informing him that he would follow his wishes as to marrying Marcia Danforth. The brief courtship was distasteful to Walter, but he felt that he was performing a filial duty in making the old man happy. The wedding day was set. A week before it arrived Marcia Danforth eloped with the man she really loved.

It was two months after that when Walter visited the neighboring city. He drew back in a doorway shocked, rigid, as there passed him on her way home from work, his heart's idol, whom he had long mourned as dead.

He summoned the self-control to follow her. He located her home, then he returned to his uncle. He poured out his heart to him. The old man was disappointed, the house was lonely.

"Yes," he said huskily, after a moment of thought, "tell Aline Durand I ask her to become my niece."

Walter Marsh had found his lost love. "I will not let you go again," he declared to her the next day, and gentle, loyal Aline, when he had told her all, was content to abide his will.

Outspoken Athenian.

More than twenty-three hundred years ago a young Athenian, speaking of his wife, said to Socrates: "When I saw that she had powder on her face to make it whiter and rouge to make it redder, and that she wore high-heeled shoes to appear taller, I told her it was as dishonorable for her to try to deceive me about her beauty as for me to try to deceive her about my property. I added that, although her arts might impose upon others, they could not impose upon me, who saw her at all times."—Youth's Companion.
